Kirgiz's Grand Heart Song

(Preface)

The Manas is a heroic epic of the Kirgiz people. It circulates in places like Kizilsu Kirgiz Autonomous Prefecture, Aksu, Yili, Kashgar and Hotan, where the Kirgiz people live.

The Kirgiz people of Kyrgyzstan in Central Asia and of China are of the same people group. The Manas epic circulats in Kyrgyzstan as well as in Kazakhstan, Afghanistan and Pakistan where the Kirgiz people inhabit.

The Kirgiz people group has walked ceaselessly on the continent of Asia. They took traveling as the pencil, heart as the ink, the earth as the paper, and their songs as the history to record the heroic and moving heart song of their people. Eagle and song are the pair of wings that make the Kirgiz fly. Prairies are the home of steeds, and heroes are the pride of the Kirgiz people. The Kirgiz people take the prairie as their home and respect heroes. Those headmen, who were selfless and fearless, courageous and knowledgeable, took their people out of the tight corner–then becoming the ones people praised. Manas was one of them. The epic Manas tells is a story about how Manas and his seven generations of offspring fought courageously and fearlessly for the living and developing of their people group. Manas is a sacred person in the Kirgiz's hearts, they consider Manas to be the image of their national hero. Nomads are not good at compiling written language, but they have talent in music and singing. Singing their history is one important way they express their culture and art. The numerous stories of heroes and the tradition of singing their history together formed an abundant source for the epic. Among the long poems of the Kirgiz people, heroic epics occupies first place in number and develops the epic best. There are about more than sixty heroic epics, like Kogeojash, Geodar Beshim, and Budayik (about myths and the life of hunting), Baershi, Hero Toshituk and Saykali (related to the characters of Manas), and Aji Bayi, Kurmanbek and Janerlimurzha (about the legendary people). Kirgiz people reflect or describe and bring to life, fight, history, outstanding heroes, major social events, customs, etiquette, love, people and nature, migration of the nation, culture, language, philosophy and aesthetics into the heroic epics. Manas is the peak which shines a magical light among these heroic epics. It is the classic of Kirgiz culture.

Epic Manas handed down by word of mouth, so it appears in different versions and has some variants. The Manas epic circulated by the Kirgiz people in China is accepted by researchers around the world as the one most complete in the story and most abundant in content of the Manas epics. The great Manas singer Jusup Mamay, who lives in Kizilsu Kirgiz Autonomous Prefecture of Xinjiang, can sing the complete eight books of Manas, which totally has more than 235 thousand lines. It is fourteen times longer in length than the Greek epic Iliad and the longest one among the three greatest epics in China, namely Manas, Janger and Gesar. The epic Manas was listed in the Chinese National Intangible Culture Heritage in 2005, and was listed in the World's Intangible Culture Heritage in 2011 by UNESCO.

Judging from the epic Manas, in which Manas led his people and conducted heroic struggles, we can know the time since the epic describes the time as the beginning of the 13th century when the Mongolian army swept the north and the central part of Asia. The Karamark tribe among the Mongolians (namely the Torgut Mongolians)once occupied the Kirgiz homeland for a long period of time, then provoked the long-term fight between these two nomadic people groups. The Kirgiz people summarized the heroic deeds of their people group into the stories of Manas and his seven generations of offspring and handed them down to future generations in the form of folk epics.

In the first book of the epic story, the Manas tells the story of the legendary life of Manas from his birth to his death. The rest of the seven books tell of the glorious lives of Manas' seven generations of offspring. The epic is such a great work, integrating literature, music, history, philosophy and folklore; it can be considered as an encyclopedia of Kirgiz history and literature.

As time rolls into the modern society, along with the process of worldwide cultural transformation, the social environment for the heroic epics has changed. This is especially true for the folk oral literature which is carried by word of mouth. It inevitably faces the crisis of a transmission break after the change in the language environment. Then it is a pressing and meaningful task to edit and publish these works which are representative of fine traditional culture. The works must be spread to the public and preserved for future generations.

In order to salvage the valuable representative works of the intangible cultural heritage like the heroic epic Manas, Chunxian Zhang, CCP Politburo member, General Secretary of the Party Committee of Xinjiang Uyghur Autonomous Region, and Nur Bekely, Chairman of Xinjiang Uyghur Autonomous Region made important instructions on them and urged that the processes of the sorting, translating and publishing of the Manas be carried out. After the Central Working Conference to Xinjiang, Tiliwardi Abuduresiti, Vice Chairman of Xinjiang Uyghur Autonomous Region at that time, went to Beijing in person and had meeting with leaders of the State Administration of Press, Publication, Radio, Film and Television of the People's Republic of China. They discussed together the work of helping Xinjiang in culture and publication and highly appreciated and specially supported the editing and publishing of Manas. National Publication Foundation Planning and Management Office took it seriously, after the careful argumentation of the committee of experts, the State Administration of Press, Publication, Radio, Film and Television of the People's Republic of China finally approved to edit and publish Chinese, Kirgiz and English editions of Manas, and provided great financial support. Memetieshan Tohudali (Former Vice Chairman of Committee of CPPCC of Xinjiang Uyghur Autonomous Region), and Yorguli Japar (Vice Director of People's Congress of Xinjiang Uyghur Autonomous Region) paid long-term attention to and guided the work of the sorting, translating and publishing. They also emphasized many times the need to make the Manas epic a classic work, a competitive work and a masterpiece from age to age. The successive leaders of the Federation of Literary and Art of Xinjiang Uyghur Autonomous Region attached great importance to the sorting, translating and publishing of the Manas epic and poured much energy into the collecting, sorting and rewriting. Department of Culture of Xinjiang Uyghur Autonomous Region cares passionately about the work of the intangible cultural heritage protection of Manas epic and actively gives financial support for its protection. Kizilsu Kirgiz Autonomous Prefecture did a very efficient job, giving careful guidance and great support to the editing and publishing of the Manas. Manas Chinese Translation Committee and Jusup Mamay, great Manas singing artist, made significant contributions to the editing and publishing of the Manas epic. The benefits of the work are beyond measure in ensuring the synchronous operation of the three different language versions of the Manas epic.

To ensure its acceptance into the national publication program as a classic publication work, Xinjiang People's Publishing Group set up the Committee of Editing, Translating and Publishing of Manas, set up a program office led by editors, invited experts and researchers as committee members, and laid down strict program implementation plans. They invited Ying Lang, Zhenhua Hu, Adili Jumaturdi, Hongchao Zhang, Yingfu Luo, Jumark Kader, Jihong He, Marklek Yumerbye, Manbet, Yanhu Cui, Ming Li, Memetihari, Yishabek Beshanbek as experts of Reviewing Team, to examine the proofreading and revise and polish the manuscript. The senior art editor designed the format of the distinctive Kirgiz characters according to the ancient Kirgiz traditional patterns. And in accordance with the requirement of the entire layout of the book, art editors completed the illustration of the book. The editing, translating and publishing of the Chinese Kirgiz heroic epic Manas fills in the gap of the three great Chinese epics. This was a great event in the cultural life of the Chinese Kirgiz people. It was a grand occasion of excellent traditional culture of the Chinese Kirgiz walking to the forest of world literature. Ultimately, it was another practical achievement of the Chinese Intangible Cultural Heritage Protection Organization.

The publication of the heroic epic Manas has not only had a profound and practical impact, but also has a far-reaching social impact. As is known to all, Manas has been added to the world intangible cultural heritage list. It is not only a soul history of the Kirgiz people, but also a great spiritual heritage to all human beings. It is not only a great work of literature, but also an encyclopedia of folk culture. It is not only on a par with Homer's Epic, but also a monumental work of Chinese heroic epic. The publication of the book is a contribution to the Chinese and World Literature. It also provides an opportunity to allow this valuable literature heritage to be handed down for future generations to absorb the nutrients it contains.

A classic will never be out of date. It carves its way into the heart of a nation or people group like footprints and kisses. A person's spiritual developing process is fed in his reading process. The heroic epic Manas is such a classic. It makes a nation and people group never forget its struggles and splendid past and be worthy of today's mission. It is enlightened with heart, generated with spirit, practiced in human affairs and served the society. It can help you cultivate your mind and also be an ideology to administer affairs.

At the time of the publication of the illustrated edition of the Book One (Volume One to Four) of the Chinese Kirgiz Heroic Epic Manas in Kirgiz, Chinese and English, I gratefully acknowledge the contribution of everyone who contributed much effort in the sorting, translating, polishing, publishing and circulating of the illustrated edition.

Preface

Manas, one of the three biggest epics in China, is a heroic epic of the Kirgiz and a folk literature work which is widely circulated, inherited and loved by Kirgiz people from generation to generation.

Manas is the name of the whole epic and also the name of the hero in the first volume. This epic, which generated from the ancient tribal battle time, is a masterwork of folk art in the period of hero-worship. Through word of mouth for a thousand years, the epic became the spiritual pillar and cultural symbol with the combination of people's knowledge of Kirgiz society, nature and life as a running river, which made it an encyclopedia of natural and social science in the fields of Kirgiz politics, economy, history, culture, language, philosophy, religion, military, medicine, astronomy, geography, aesthetics, folk custom, literature and art.

The epic has a vast accumulation in its contents and length. It tells the story of a long period, and has many different versions; only the version from Jusup Mamay owns 235 thousand lines. The epic presents a moving story of Manas and his following seven generations. It highly eulogizes their extremely hard and bitter battle in defending their people and hometown, expressing their heroic spirit in struggle amidst revolting external invasion while striving for Kirgiz freedom, establishing their beautiful homes, and obtaining happy lives.

The epic is the typical structure of family heroic stories. Each book presents the legendary story of a hero of the family. From Manas to his following generations, the romantic but moving and tragic occurrences form the whole epic. The epic tells the history of the Kirgiz in the manner of poetic language, and brings readers into the picture of ancient Kirgiz life through these touching stories. There are wise Khans, brave and wise generals, grand old ministers, eloquent emissaries, heroines, wizards, workers and traitors, the villains in the story. No matter positive heroes or negative persons, they are all described vividly and magically with lively characteristics. Hero Manas is brave, valiant and without rival in strength. He is like the brave tiger in the front and like the great lion in the back, as strong as a dragon and as agile as an eagle. When he goes to battle, vicious tigers are in the front, black bears follow and great dragons are within him. He wears the iron helmet, battle gown with the battle-axe on his shoulder, the long spear in his hand and the sword on his waist, and fights in the battlefield elegantly. Through the characterization of heroes led by Manas, the epic outlines a folk picture of ancient Kirgiz life reflected in a wedding ceremony, recreation and other events which are all amazing.

The epic is a treasure of language art. Comparison and exaggeration are the common ways in epic. It always uses the tiger, the black mane wolf and the male camel to compare with the brave heroes. The epic has the strict meter and strong sensation of rhythm. It rhymes in almost every line, with many of them rhyming both in the beginning and at the end of the same line, which makes the epic conversational and beautiful. The epic is independent from one volume to another and at the same time the volumes connect with each other closely, which makes a good connection and understanding of characters, plots and narration. The epic is a great manifestation of art displaying the brilliant Kirgiz talents and excellent skills. It also fully reveals the uniqueness of Kirgiz literature, conveying their aesthetic tastes in the depiction of people and animals and the description of the plots. Manas is a classical work with eternal life, which represents the crest of Kirgiz literature development and has enjoyed popularity for a thousand years. Manas is a noble image that all Kirgiz revere, and his spirit is forever pursued by the Kirgiz.

In the autumn of 1960, Fajun Liu, Jiaqi Liu and others from Xinjiang Writers' Community heard folk artists sing Manas when they were soliciting contributions in Kizilsu Kirgiz Autonomous Prefecture. Right at that time, teachers and students from Minzu University of China, who were teaching and majoring in Kirgiz language, were doing their language practicing activities there. With the help of those teachers and students, these writers recorded "Semtaiy and Ayiqulek", which is one part of "Semtaiy" in Manas and was sung by a famous Manas singer Timur in Wuqia county. Later, they translated it into the Uyghur language and into Chinese, and published it in literature magazines Tianshan (Chinese) and Tarim (Uyghur language).

In May 1964, the Manas research group was founded under the discussion of the Folk Literature and Art Seminar of China, Literary Federation of Xinjiang Autonomous Region and Party Committee of Kizilsu Kirgiz Autonomous Prefecture. Fajun Liu from Xinjiang and Yang Tao from Beijing were leading the group to interview in Kizilsu Kirgiz Autonomous Prefecture and record the epic Manas. In 1978, the Manas leading group was set up again and was led by Zhenhua Hu, professor from Minzu University of China. Their mission was to record and translate it in Beijing. In June 1982, Xinjiang's Manas leading group was set up and Fajun Liu from Xinjiang's Manas Research Office of National Research Committee of China was responsible for the detailed work. In November 1989, the Manas leading group made an adjustment. It was still administered by Fajun Liu. After Liu retired from his position, Adili Jumaturdi and Yishabek Beshanbek were responsible for the work in succession.

The dragnet search of collecting the content of Manas began from 1960s under the guiding principle of "overall collecting, key sorting, all –out popularizing, research strengthening" and "faithfully recording." The collecting people were divided into three groups. They rode the camels and yaks, crossed mountains and rivers, went over all the remote villages and visited places the Kirgiz inhabited. In three months, they had finally collected more than 200 thousand lines of epic and some other folk literature works. It was right at this time, they noticed famous Manas singer Jusup Mamay. Later, Jusup Mamay spent 8 months recording the first five volumes of the epic ——"Manas", "Semtaiy", "Seytek", "Kenainim", and "Saiyit", totaling more than 110 thousand lines.

From August 1964 to January 1965, the Manas leading group spent nearly half of a year to fill in the gaps among four counties in Kizilsu Kirgiz Autonomous Prefecture. This time, they recorded some chapters of Manas ——"Koktoy's Fiesta", "Sent Letters to Seven Khans", "Expedition", which were 124 thousand lines, and also they got 21 manuscript books of Manas with about 90 thousand lines. Jusup Mamay supplemented the content of Book One "Manas" from 38 thousand lines to 59 thousand lines, Book Two "Semtaiy" from 27 thousand lines to 32 thousand lines, Book Three "Seytek" from 18 thousand lines to 24 thousand lines, Book Four "Kenainim" from 16 thousand lines to 34 thousand lines, Book Five "Saiyit" from 28 hundred lines to 10 thousand lines (later to 24 thousand lines). He also sang Book Six "Aslebacha and Bekbacha" for 45 thousand lines during that time.

In 1978, Jusup Mamay supplemented the first six books in Beijing, and at the same time, sang for the first time Book Seven "Sombilek" and Book Eight "Chigetey".

With the initial hard work of a few decades, the collection of the great epic Manas eventually gave results. More than 80 singers' singing versions were gathered, and Jusup Mamay's Kirgiz version was published in 1995. In 2005, the revised edition and the Slavic language version were published, which evoked a strong response among the countries of Kyrgyzstan and Russia, as well as other countries.

The translation of the epic from the Kirgiz language to Chinese started almost at the same time as the collecting and recording of the epic. But its Chinese version was not published until 2009 for various reasons. In 1961, along with the collecting of the Manas, the work of the Chinese translation was started by the group set up by Kizilsu Kirgiz Autonomous Prefecture, Kirgiz language teachers and students from Minzu University of China, Xinjiang Literary Federation and Folk Literature and Art Seminar of China. By 1965, the first five books of epic Manas, sung by Jusup Mamay, were translated into Chinese and the first book was published into two books. From 1964 to 1966, Jusup Mamay supplemented the five books he sang in 1961 one by one and then sang the sixth book for the first time. The translating group re-translated the first six books again. But unfortunately, during the ten-year Cultural Revolution, the translating group was dismissed and all their efforts were in vain.

In order to draw the attention of more readers to the epic Manas, many folk writers and artists made great effort to publicize it via different newspapers, magazines and books. Due to their efforts, many well-chosen passages were published. At the same time, the Chinese translation of Manas Volume One, organized by Fajun Liu and Kirgiz Folk Literary Classics and Manas well-chosen passages organized by Kizilsu Kirgiz Autonomous Prefecture History Recording Office and Xinjiang Folk Literary Seminar, was published by Xinjiang People's Publishing House. But for various reasons, the translating work of Manas from Kirgiz to Chinese was not going in a systematical process.

In 2004, with the protecting program of Intangible Cultural Heritage of China starting formally, Kizilsu Kirgiz Autonomous Prefecture and Xinjiang Literary Federation set up the Manas Chinese Translating Group, an efficient working group involving multi-nationalities.

On January 8th 2006, member of Political Bureau of CPC Central Committee and secretary of the Party Committee of Xinjiang Uyghur Autonomous Region Lequan Wang, deputy secretary of the Party Committee of Xinjiang Uyghur Autonomous Region Nur Bekely and member of the Party Committee of Xinjiang and minister of Xinjiang Publicity Department Yi Li made the comment that on internal reference "Protection and Inheritage Work of the Epic Manas should be strengthened separately." They urged the parties concerned to enhance the work of protecting and inheriting Manas, which guaranteed the protection of the work on the Manas.

This time, the translation work from Kirgiz to Chinese was under the principle of the organizing, funding, coordinating and directing being handled by the government. Autonomous Prefecture Government and Xinjiang Folk Artists Commission organized the professionals who were proficient in both Kirgiz and Chinese, as well as writing, to do the work of translating, examining and approving.

First, this Chinese edition is based on the Kirgiz language Manas, sung by Jusup Mamay, republished by Xinjiang People's Publishing House in 2004.

There are three teams under the leading group: translating, collating and annotating team, editing and arranging team, and examining and approving team. The three teams were clear on their own responsibility and cooperating with each other to translate and compare Kirgiz and Chinese, sort, examine, approve and collate strictly.

Second, at the beginning of the Manas Chinese translation, the leading group had already told the related professionals the translating principles of "being faithful to the original version, maintaining its own style and being common and smooth in its words" to achieve the goal of appealing to all by keeping the original flavor of the content and the characteristic of folk artists' improvisational singing style, and taking account of the majority of Han readers' habits. Moreover, Manas is the world's art and cultural treasure handed down from a thousand years ago; so in translating, it not only needs to represent the charm of the epic, but also it needs to appropriately handle the problems they meet in transferring the vocal songs to written words.

The Chinese draft translation of the first volume of Manas held two reviewing meetings and one examining and approving meeting. The people attending these meetings were: Memetyeshan Tohudali, Parhat Turdi, Bin Liu, Jumark Kader, Shamus Humar, Zhenhua Hu, Ying Lang, Adili Jumaturdi, Jiamucha, Hongchao Zhang, Wurhalicha Hederbye, Xiongfu Ma, Jihong He, Zhongyi Xiu, Guodong Zhao, Manbet Turdi, Maklek Yumerbye, Shige, Yishabek Beshanbek, Xincheng Niu, Yusurf Yishak, Mohtar Juma, Aishan Simayi, Zhayir Jumashi and so on.

Manas is the great cultural heritage produced by the whole

Kirgiz nation for centuries. The investing, recording, arranging, translating and publishing of Manas is also the fruit of working together. As we publish this book, we express our great homage and cherish our memory of those who inherited and passed down Manas from generation to generation for a thousand years. We also want to show our sincere appreciation to the people participating in investigating, recording, arranging, translating and publishing the work of Manas and to the Party leaders and experts who were concerned about it for decades.

Prelude

Prelude

Ah……ah……yi,
I desire the chanting of hero Manas,
Let his soul bless me,
Make my singing chime and heartfelt.

With half fact,
And half imagination,
For no one had the hero for company,
There is no harm whether real or imaginary,
If it fulfills the hopes of listeners?

If I chant loudly and clearly,
Everyone must be in a joyful spirit.
Which part is the fact,
Which part is the imagination,
No one experienced firsthand,
As long as the radiant moon hangs in the sky,
We needn't know it's waning or full.
Every time I chant,
I am filled with passion,
And stir up billows of emotion deep in everyone's heart.

This is the story from our ancestors,
How can we refrain from chanting it;
This is the heritage from our ancestors,
Passed on to today from generation to generation.

If I don't sing the praise for the hero,
How can I rid myself of worry and anxieties?
As long as I sing the praise for the hero,
Graceful and elegant words will flow endlessly,
No other time is more suitable for me to sing than now?

The arrow is drawn in the bow,
The silver saddle drapes the steed,
Let my singing commence,
With world's most beautiful words.

It's the words handed down by our ancestors,
The heroic utterance that can defeat all;
The great language that can hardly compare,
The earnest words that can make us prosper and flourish.

It's the peerless language created by our forefathers,
The exquisite language passed on by descendants;
The words harvested forever like seeds,
The language that is greatly admired and revered.

It's the language handed down from generation to generation,
The language inherited by each generation;
The words told by our forefathers,
The language carried on eternally by offspring;
The most vibrant and striking language in the world,
The most glorious and brilliant language in the world.

No matter how many centuries passed,
It's the language that stood by its people.
The language that stretched endlessly,
The language that can coexist with the earth.
The great language that can transcend the universe,

The language more dazzling than the sun,
The language more brilliant than the moon.

From then until now,
Countless generations walked away,
Endless number of days passed by:
Warriors on elephants disappeared,
Heroes with extraordinary physical strength passed away,
But the hero was remembered by us forever,
A lion-like hero, like Manas,
Never emerged again.

From then until now,
High mountains leveled to ground,
Ridges and peaks eroded to dust,
The earth split open by rivers,
River valleys dried into wilderness,
Such a hero like Manas,
Never emerged again.

Barren beaches transformed into lakes,
Seas into mulberry fields,
Hills into gullies,
Snow-capped peaks' appearance varied greatly,
While the story of hero Manas has always remained the same,
It has been passed from generation to generation.
The story of Manas,
Endures unbroken through good and bad with its people.

It is the fierce howling of storms,
The sweet song of larks,
The loud peal of thunders,
The dignity of the disquieted Chinese dragon.

The raging waves of floods,
It is the thunderous shout,
And the lightning flashing across the sky.

It is the language as sweet as honey,
The words can never be possessed by its singers;
The language running like ten thousand horses galloping ahead,
The language can win the crown,
the language can transcend the summit.

It is the language that soars over the sky,
And with which rosy clouds fail to keep pace;
It is the language that crosses the ocean,
And cannot be dispersed by violent winds;
It is the language that carries along,
As precious as pearls;
It is the language that flows over the sea of songs,
And soothes the raging waves.

It is the language that can melt the ice,
That can open up the listeners' heart.
It is the language that moves steadily towards glory,
And overcomes all adversities.

The story recounts,
Much magic, many giants,
And countless customs,
Listen carefully,
There are also exaggerations and fictitious content.

There is immeasurable gold and silver,
A great number of battles of horses driven with whip and spur,
Numerous unbearable miseries,

And bitterly disappointing struggles.

There are countless warriors who are thrown off their feet,
Countless robes that can't be penetrated by arrows,
Countless horses faster than wind,
Countless heroes as strong as mountains.

There are many oaths sworn through breaking the arrow,
Many tricks always changing and unpredictable,
Many rules made according to the breaking-willow twig-vow①.
It can't be told clearly,
How many kinds of grotesquely shaped arms there are.

There are thousands and thousands of wise men and role models,
Thousands and thousands of discouragements and deceptions,
Thousands and thousands of fortune-tellers and prophets,
Thousands and thousands of noble experts and advisers,
And thousands and thousands of famous celebrities.

There are plenty of skillful craftsmen,
Plenty of fairy wives;
Plenty of lively sorceries,
Plenty of exotic birds,
And even more immortals.
Sweet singers are in abundance,
Singing beautifully as nightingales;
Valuables are immeasurable,
Which are too many for the world.
Things, can be told, are,
As much as sand on the beach.
It is the story of the supreme hero,

① Breaking-willow twig-vow: When Kirgiz people swear, they usually break willow twigs. It means the person who goes against his vow will be broken like the willow twig.

Kirgiz people keep till now.
No matter what the appearance of the earth will be in fifty years,
And how the world will change in a century,
Only the story of the unmatched hero,
We desire to hear again and again,
And feel better and better.

So many centuries have passed,
The story of the ancient hero,
Is still worth hearing a hundred times now.
Let us come back,
Our story of the hero Manas,
Begins.

Source of Kirgiz Nationality

Legend of the Forty Tribes

Ah … Ah … A yi!
In order to keep chanting unceasingly,
We must ask the elders for the source of the legend.
They said, in the remote past,
To our northeast,
There was a place called Yenisey.
There, land was vast and fertile,
Verdant green filled the river valley,
Lush pasture grass danced in the wind on hillsides.

People worked at cultivation,
Meager effort could gather a bountiful harvest,
Grain fully stocked in cellars and barns.
Wanderers who roamed there,
Couldn't bear to part with the beautiful place.

There, the poor and the rich made no difference,
There, a flourishing population led a moderately comfortable life.

The person who ruled the Yenisey people,
Was Karl Mamay Khan.
After he was elected Khan,
The name Karl was forgotten,
The heroic name, Mamay Khan, was known to the whole nation.

Mamay Khan was a real hero,
Everyone praised him for acting fair and just.
Among his contemporary fellows,

No one could be compared with him.
Yenisey, the vast land,
No tribe dare invade.

Year after year,
The nation was flourishing more with a growing population;
More immigrants came,
The forty tribes' union formed.

Mamay Khan named the union:
"Qirghiz[①]."
He governed the union,
for forty years.

People lived in peace and contentment,
No other clan came to invade.
Forty years of harmonious relations,
Were shared with their neighbors.

Mamay Khan had five wives,
None gave him a child.
A widow with many daughters and sons was,
Still very beautiful after a long widowed life.
"Maybe she can bear me a son!"
Mamay Khan married her.

Thanks to the marriage with the widow,
Khan's son was born.
He named his son Bordeno,
Bordeno was attractive with a full forehead.
When he was nine years old,
His face showed an air of the mane wolf,
His build was strong and powerful.

How the world should be cursed,

① Qirghiz: It's Kirgiz language, namely forty tribes. This is one of the legends of Kirgiz source.

Nobody could predict the misery.
Mamay Khan was afflicted with serious disease,
He suffered unbearable pains and groaned every day.
The tree of life was trembling,
The towering mountain collapsed abruptly,
Mamay Khan passed away.

People rushed to join Khan's funeral procession,
People from the forty tribes,
Gathered together in succession.

The elders with silver beard,
The sages of great ability and wisdom,
They sat in an ox-horn formation,
And drew on the collected wisdom.
They invited Bordeno,
Let him sit in the center.

A man called Galtaybas,
Was eloquent.
"I must put forward my opinion,
To everyone present here.
Your Excellency, Prince Bordeno,
Mamay Khan's only son,
You need listen to my opinion carefully.

"Mamay Khan was a brilliant king,
He was firm, fearless and brave,
Showed great foresight,
And commands deep love and reverence among the people.
No matter how strong the enemy was,
None dare to invade.

"In the times of Mamay Khan,
Along the turbulent Yenisey riverside,
The union of the forty tribes formed.
Both sides of the Yenisey are vast expanses,

Bumper harvest comes every year.

"Sheep cover hills and dales,
And walk leisurely around houses;
Herds of cattle roam along the riverbank,
And horses meander on the hillsides freely.

"Two-humped camels,
Ramble on the pastures at will;
Four domestic animals① cover the prairie,
Civilians live in peace and plenty.

"Wanderers everywhere stop here,
The forty tribes camp together.
Livestock increases, the population too,
To four thousand people in each tribe.

"'You should defeat the enemy and safeguard our hometown!'
Qirghiz in the forty tribes.
Were named 'Kirgiz' by Mamay Khan,
And is still in use.

"Forty tribes 'Qirghiz',
And the name 'Kirgiz' was known universally.

"Now, our respected Khan has passed away,
His only son,
Bordeno has grown up,
We should recommend him to be our new Khan.

"You all know a truth:
Eaglet who preys on jackals and wolves,
Never pecks on rotten meat,
But catches the fox to feed.

① Four domestic animals: Common name of horse, cattle sheep and camel given by Kirgiz people.

"We should respect Bordeno the same as respecting Mamay Khan,
Support him, assist him and foster him;
Let him take the great responsibility of Khan,
Be our bellwether.

"Mamay Khan has passed away,
But his personal mount was not infected with disease,
Even a grain of rice was not robbed by enemy,
No civilians suffered from misery.

"Our fair-minded Mamay Khan,
He never punished his people without reason,
Never blamed nor railed his people either.
He bestowed on us a happy and comfortable life,
Led us as free as horses on the prairie.

"Crops on the plain swing in the wind,
Livestock stroll on hillsides.
Mamay Khan has showered great favors on us,
Happy life comes then.
How can we refrain from remembering such a great Khan?
Whoever is qualified to compete for the throne with his son Bordeno?"

Galtaybas talked sincerely,
And with great concern;
Others were completely convinced,
Encircled Bordeno immediately,
And selected him as the new Khan.

Bordeno began to perform his mission,
His prestige grew steadily.
Lives were more comfortable,
People happier;
Bordeno, acted fair and effectively,
Radiant like the moon.

His people embarked on a broad road,

Enemies lost all their invading hopes.
Bordeno Khan, methodical in everything he did,
Passed away,
After only a few years.

Bertoy, son of Bordeno Khan,
Was a pampered and spoiled boy;
Let such a boy dry up,
He couldn't shoulder the people's dependence and hope.
The star of happiness then fell,
Kirgiz people were trapped in an abyss of misery.

Fifteen generations passed by in a twinkling of an eye,
Kirgiz was still in extreme miseries.
Structure declined, population plummeted,
People became destitute and homeless.
After several centuries of hardships and torments,
Kirgiz began to seek relief from the predicament.

People made inquiries everywhere, searched high and low,
Always gathered and discussed,
They chose from Bordeno's descendants,
A young man named Boyin.
Let Boyin shoulder the task of Khan,
To ascend the throne and rule,
The heroic name of Boyin Khan was then known to the whole nation.

Kayin Khan, after Boyin Khan,
Followed by Kara Khan,
Born in succession,
Finally courageous Onuzdo Khan appeared.
Hero Onuzdo grew up among the masses,
Hardened himself like one of Buddha's warrior attendants.

His people could hold their heads high,
Could be on an equal footing with other nationalities.
Four domestic animals increased rapidly and covered the hillsides.

Hero Onuzdo traveled everywhere to select wives,
Took five into his tent,
There was no most beautiful but more beautiful.
"Onuzdo has five very beautiful wives!"
It became a fine story on everybody's lips.

Onuzdo's first wife——
Gave birth to Jagurp and Shihay;
The second wife——
Katarhan and Kartkarlan;
The third wife——
Garmgirchy and Berita;
The fourth wife——
Kasyurt and Karica;
And the last wife——
Tirckechy and Kezritay.
These ten sons of Onuzdo,
Raised by each wife.

Unrivaled hero Onuzdo,
Governed both sides of the Yenisey river.

Karaketay① and Karamark②,
Never enabled him to give in;
Enemies dreaded his prestige,
Never dare to invade his possession.

During Onuzdo's rule,
That was a golden age,
Famine never occurred.
Livestock increased abundantly,
The population soared to ninety thousand tents.

① Karaketay: "Kara" means black; "Ketay" is "Khitan". Color stands for direction in Kirgiz, black stands for North, Karaketay means "Northern Khitan".

② Karamark: Name of a tribe, namely Karlmike Mongolian tribe, means people who stayed, another name is Wala tribe.

Wealth accumulated year after year,
People were wealthy and happy.
Ten rich men rose up then,
They owned vast land, countless cattle and sheep.

Please listen to their names,
None are ordinary:
Ade Bayi, Quola Bayi and Tashi Bayi,
Their wealth defied computation.
In order to enlarge their territory,
They led twenty thousand households,
Moved to Buhara.

Kulitan and Yaleaman,
They ranked first in their wealth;
Arake, Kandier, Kurank,
Cochyquier and Kapchaque's dogs,
Never put eyes on fat,
They were the most famous rich men.

Kirgiz people at that time,
Were all prosperous and happy.
No one dared to despise them,
And invade their homeland.

Drank mare's milk and good tea every day,
Ate fat meat every day.
Had meat of the suckling calf①,
For lunch;
Had meat of the unbred mare②,
For dinner.
Kirgiz people were incomparably happy,
And free from care.

Hunted ibex on the mountains,

① Meat of the suckling calf: Kirgiz people reckon meat of baby animals is most delicious.

② Meat of unbred mare: Kirgiz people reckon meat of unbred mare is most fresh and tender.

Let no argali ewe slip into valleys,
Even though male argali on the hillside tried,
They would be still be under the thumb of Kirgiz.

Foxes under the cliff couldn't escape,
Rabbits on sandy land scurried away in disarray,
Let the sparrow hawk chase them.
Let the falcon catch the swan in the sky,
And chase wild duck and geese on the flood land.

Cast a fishing net, threw a hook in the water,
Caught plump and delicious fish.
Along the crystal-clear river side,
Caught plenty of beavers and minks.

Played the game "Take Palace①" in cool days,
And wrestled on horses and competed for a goat.
Killed pony for Cierney② Party,
Stirred mare's milk with honey, rich in fragrance.
Ate delicious food and enjoyed——
Ticktermisy and Korabuchy③,
And a tug-of-war match.

In the place people gathered together,
When you walked out of the yurt at night,
Beside each yurt,
There was a big kitchen range dug on the ground,
Appetizing fragrances of meat came from the big pot.

Rows of yurts stood in graceful array,
Visitors from afar were treated generously and thoughtfully.

① Take Palace: A kind of sport spread wide among Kirgiz people. There is no season limit for playing it.

② Cierney: Kirgiz traditional party, it usually holds in July or August each year on prairie.

③ Ticktermisy and Korabuchy: Both are Kirgiz folk games. The former is, two persons stand in the rope circle and put the rope between legs and drag each other; the latter is, three or four persons stand in the rope circle and drag each other from different direction.

The tea-urn whistled, sweet smell spread all around,
The table was packed with delicious foods.

Melody of "Rugged Mountain Path",
Resonated from the Kumuz①.
Singers sang heartily,
As if larks sang with them.
Ten fingers combined perfectly with the nose,
Eleven notes played together,
Anyone who played incorrectly would be out,
The winner received generous prizes.

Girls and daughters-in-law combed their bun,
Played pleasant music with the Ozkumuz mouth organ②,
The graceful melody,
Brought people into a dreamland.

Women weaved Kajari③ rugs,
Gorgeous embroidery patterns were wall hangings.
Fur of lynx, tiger and wolf,
Draped only over shoulders of the elders.
The elders sat in the seat of honor,
With the soft bear fur on their chairs.

Girls wore hats with a feather inserted in the top,
Women's jewelry glistened.
Young men wore gold belts,
And carried a knife at the waist.

Four domestic animals walked all around,
And were not given care.

① Kumuz: A traditional Kirgiz three-stringed plucked instrument. It's very popular among Kirgiz. Everyone can play it and each family owns one.

② Ozkumuz mouth organ: An iron instrument played with mouth and plucked with fingers by Kirgiz girls. It only has the size of a willow leaf.

③ Kajari: A kind of rug weaved by knitting wool without down in it.

When they moved house, the male camel carried a yurt on the back,
Multicolored rugs on its hump.

People kept up with their neighbor,
Ornaments increased from household to household.
Jade and precious metals like gold, silver and bronze,
Were only used to decorate saddles.

Friends became sworn brothers and draped silk gowns on each other,
Presented fine horses as a memento.
People of all ages respected each other,
Traditional virtues became people's rule of behavior.

Girls and boys got together,
Touching love songs floated under the moon all night.
A swing was erected with six high poles,
As if it could touch stars in the sky.

Wedding ceremonies abounded,
"Go in Cradle" ceremony① was prepared extravagantly:
Raced on the back of three-year-old horse,
The winner received generous prizes.

People always wrestled,
On the memorial ceremony of the dead.
Five people in a group,
Care was given by the host of each yurt,
Killed a pony, a calf and a lamb,
Offered the lamb head and lamb tail to the guests.

Competed for a goat, raced a horse and wrestled on horses,
Stroke a deep chord in the heart.
Bayonet charge on horses from courageous warriors was,
Like the rumble of thunder and the flash of lightning.

① Go in Cradle ceremony: A traditional Kirgiz ceremony held when a baby sleeps in the cradle for the first time.

Shooters drew the bow with an arrow,
Shot down the thin rope, used for hanging ingots on the pole.

People enjoyed their lives fully and happily,
Lived comfortably and freely.
This was Kirgiz's affluent times,
Daughters-in-law were not willing to taste milk skin,
Old ladies did not cast an eye on sheep-tail fat,
Such happiness passed year after year.

Legend of Mountain Herdsmen

Our remote ancestor was Ugus Khan,
Lived on this land.
Procreated till now,
New Khan could emerge in each generation.

There was one of the heroes,
Karashi was his original name.
His full moon-like face was glowing with health,
Such hero is hard to find in the world.

So long as he saw people with pock-marked face,
He would kill them all mercilessly.
His only son, very beautiful,
Was just four years old.

A sudden disease of smallpox,
Completely disfigured the child,
His beautiful face became pock-marked.
Karashi convened his chief ministers and secretaries immediately,
And told them this embarrassing secret:
"I never let my people be alive,
Once they are pock-marked.
But it's my son now,
How I could ever predict such a thing!

"If I let him be alive,
It's me breaking the rule made by myself.
Better execute before the public immediately,
Than raise him in convert secretly.

"So I consult all of you,
Without considering his identity of my only son."
Khan had made his mind with infinite sorrow,
To kill his only son.

All his ministers and secretaries gazed at each other blankly in astonishment,
A smart minister stepped forward,
And set forth an opinion:
"Your Majesty, all your decrees,
We enforce to the letter.
But this time,
How do you have the heart to kill your own only son?

"If the child cries,
How can you bear the pain?
You can't change your order,
I can't let him be alive either.
Please allow an entourage to follow me,
I will fulfill my mission in wilderness,
And place stones for his grave."

So the minister took the child,
And acted as his own plan.
He assembled a group of boys and girls,
Then took them and the prince,
To remote and untraveled mountains.

"You can never come back,
I give you a name 'Colegez'①."
He set free all these children after his words.

These young boys and girls walked toward untraveled mountains,
They were with different height,
And different age,
They married each other freely,

① Colegez: Refers to people lived as a nomad in mountains. It developed to the name of Kirgiz. It's one of the legends about source of Kirgiz nationality.

Their new lives began.

The prince of Karashi Khan married a beautiful girl,
And she bore him a pretty son.
They lived in mountains rarely visited by human beings,
It was hard to look up a suitable name for his son,
They named their son Boyin finally.

Boyin's son was Kayin,
Then followed by Kara Khan,
Colegez people from the generation of Kara Khan,
Multiplied from several branches gradually.

Kara Khan's son was Onuzdo,
A hero hard to seek for in the world.
He had over ninety thousand households,
He never bowed to Karamark Qingersh.

He ruled the area of Yenisey river,
And vied with Karamark people.
His five wives bore ten sons for him,
People called them "Onuzdo's ten heroes".

Folk legend about them spread widely,
Jagurp and Shihay were twin brothers,
Their mother was Onuzdo's first wife.
Katarhan and Kartkarlan,
Were born by the second wife.
The third wife gave birth to,
Garmgirchy and Berita.
Kasyurt and Karica's mother,
Was the fourth wife.
Tirckechy and Kezritay,
Were born by the fifth wife.
Onuzdo's ten sons,
Had the same great father,
And five different mothers.

Such surprising thing,
Made people confused.
Let's put it aside,
Let's begin the story of Karamark leader Arokai,
And his invasion to Kirgiz.

Born and Grown up of Manas

Arokai's invasion to Kirgiz

During Onuzdo's rule,
Malaria ran rampant shockingly.
Onuzdo was in the prime of life,
But a sudden disease,
Engulfed his life mercilessly.
A hero① called Arokai emerged during this time,
He ruled vast land,
Karaketay and Karamark were both his subjects.

Arokai occupied, a mountain city,
Called Nalun.
Damn Arokai was a tyrant,
He killed people like killing flies,
He once dyed the whole river red with blood.

When Onuzdo left the human world,
And went to nether world,
Arokai was unruly and arrogant in the extreme:
"Who dare set himself against me in this world?
Where can you find out a Khan like me in the universe?"

He came and invaded Kirgiz brazenly,
Expelled Onuzdo's sons,
And plundered wantonly,
Brought unbearable disasters,
To happy Kirgiz people.
Ten households owned one iron wok only,

① Hero: Ancient Kirgiz people gave the name "hero" to anyone who had great strength, no matter he was positive or negative.

That was Kirgiz people's life.
They were bullied and oppressed severely,
Acted carefully before Karamark people.

"These damn Brute people,
We can't let them live together.
They will rise in rebellion sooner or later,
In resisting for their goal."
Arokai issued the guilty directive,
Forced Kirgiz to leave their hometown, Yenisey.

Onuzdo's sons,
Were not as strong as their father;
They didn't join hands in sharing a bitter hatred of the enemy,
In fighting against the invaders,
But chose to leave their hometown.

Ade Bayi, Kuola Bayi and Tashi Bayi,
Furled their tents instantly,
Moved towards Buhara.
People stayed were more miserable,
They were reduced to slavery overnight.

Onuzdo's sons,
Each pursued his own way.
Kasyurt and Karica discussed secretly:
"We should make our decision early,
We can't walk against such strong wind,
Otherwise we will be blown off immediately.
Karamark people are like flood.
If we attempt to stop the flood,
We will be submerged by it."

They guided their thirty thousand households people,
Acknowledged their inferiority to Karamark shamelessly.
Two Karamark people guarded them,
They became Karamark's slaves.

Two Karamark guards,
One was called Araban, the other was Kezhay;
Kasyurt and Karica,
Gave their sons' names,
After their masters' names.
From then on,
Their descendants were called "Araban" and "Kezhay",
Formed two separate tribes finally.

Other Khans of Kirgiz,
Were expelled by Karamark.
Onuzdo's sons,
Were separated and,
Roamed about like Karamark people's bottom of a trouser leg①.

Among Karamark people,
There was a man called Nuoyi,
He was very rich,
And famous in nation wide.
The place he lived,
Was called Barikart.

Arokai sent Jagurp to Nuoyi,
As a gift.
"Nuoyi's man",
Jagurp was forced to accept his new name,
Finally it was known as Nuoyi tribe.

Garmgirchy and Berita were two great men,
Karamark was worried:
"We must part them from each other."
So expelled them by force,
Both of them were boiled with rage,
But hopeless outnumbered,
They had to yield reluctantly.

① Bottom of a trouser leg: It is derogatory in Kirgiz language. They always use "(not) as good as one's bottom of a trouser leg" to refer a person who is more miserable than a parasite.

Berita's subjects,
Were also expelled by force,
They moved to a place at the foot of Chabura mountain in Altay area,
It was called Akchabura prairie.

With prairie joined,
They had to be neighbors with Karamark people in Noygout,
The heroic, Berita, was forgotten gradually,
He was called "Noygout" instead.
Kirgiz fell into unprecedented grief,
They didn't dare to resist at all except absolute obedience.

Katarhan and Kartkarlan,
Lived in Atebashi.
Karamark's several invasions got heavy blows.
They never abjectly surrendered to their enemy, Karamark,
And still lived in their original place.
This branch of Kirgiz people,
Was called "Karid kirgiz"①.
With the lapse of time,
"Karid" developed into "Kara",
So they were called "Kara kirgiz"②.

Karacha, Kartkarlan's son,
Became a Khan of Kirgiz.
His only daughter Sayikali was very beautiful,
And was known far and wide.

Garmgirchy's subjects were expelled,
Left their hometown and roamed about.
Kirgiz people fell apart like grains,
Were bullied and subservient,
Endured all hardships and struggles for survival.

① Karid Kirgiz: Means "stayed Kirgiz" in Kirgiz language. .

② Kara Kirgiz: In Kirgiz language, its original meaning was "black". Kirgiz people use "black" to refer to "North", they respect north at the same time, "North" means strong and powerful; "Kara Kirgiz" means both Northern Kirgiz and powerful Kirgiz.

No one is willing to suffer torments!
Let alone the living person,
Even animals are not willing to leave their home.

Garmgirchy and Shihay,
Both were expelled to Samurhan,
Guarded by a Karamark person called Yesitek,
Freedom thereupon walked far away.
They were widely known,
As "Yesitek people's Garmgirchy".

Kerzritay was expelled as well,
Lived far away from their original place.
He had large number of subjects,
All of them were expelled,
To leave their hometown for the foot of ice mountain,
Then to live with Tajik together.

Both Kirgiz and Tajik there,
Were ruled by Kapchaque.
Kerzritay and his people,
Were then known as "Kapchaque".
They lived together with Southern merchants,
So they were called Salter① Kirgiz.
"Kirgiz Kapchaque and Salter Kapchaque",
These names were passed on and on.

Tirckechy had no offspring,
This branch disappeared.
His subjects fled all the way,
And thereupon faded away as well.

Kirgiz people wandered all around like sand,
Suffered endless torments.
Tears welled up all the time,

① Salter: Means merchant in Kirgiz language, also refers to yellow, which stands for South. Salter Kapchaque means Southern merchant. Kapchaque, also called Southern Kirgiz.

Couldn't be stopped like downpour.

Even though lived in the depths of suffering,
Jagurp never sank into despair.
He worked hard and his livestock increased steadily,
He wore waistband with jewelry.

He bribed Karamark people with steeds and silk gowns,
Pretended to get along with them.
Everyone can be touched by wealth,
Poor can make hero bow his head.
Amassing wealth and property,
Can make a person hold his head high.

Nuoyi Khan of Karamark,
Thought highly of rich Jagurp,
Khan was wild with joy to see such huge sum of wealth,
Both Kirgiz and Karamark people there,
Selected Jagurp as their leader without hesitation.

Garmgirchy and Akberita①,
Were well versed in divining book *Asturap*②.
Their miserable suffering was unbearable to look back,
So they held the red divining book,
Studied assiduously.

"Manas will be born among Kirgiz people!"
What was in black and white could clearly be seen.
In the book:
"He will not only drive Karamark out of Kirgiz land,
But also rule Kangayi③ area."

"Not only people from all parts,

① Akberita: Who was called Berita as well, also Berita Khan.

② Asturap: A divining book that used for practicing divination by ancient Kirgiz.

③ Kangayi: Name of a place, located around ancient Khangai mountain. It also refers to tribe in this book.

Heroes good at martial arts skills,
But also Ketay people in the distance,
And all the land and people in surrounding area,
Will be under his rule."

Such prediction made them surprising and exciting.
Let us turn to Karamark people and Khan,
When they heard of the name,
The unborn child's name,
How did they react.

In the sun-set western area,
Karamark people lived,
In a place called Sari Arka,
Ruled by Shawruk Khan.

Dolias Khan occupied Kotuliac,
These two tribes were contiguous to each other.
Many Karamark great men and Khans,
And Kontoy lived in Buokoydon.

Men of extraordinary strength such as Sokso, Sotoy,
And Duohan lived in Aranick.

Land of Aranick,
Were recovered by Kirgiz later,
And widely known as Andijan city.
Hohan people got busy building,
The name of Aratshare① has been handed down to this very day.
Hohan's fame,
Can be still heard of these days.

Karamark was a powerful clan,
They owned many mysterious tradition.
They could predict the future precisely,

① Aratshare: Means "six cities" in Kirgiz language.

That was their inborn capabilities.

There were many famous prophets among them,
Erenkuduke was one very outstanding;
A divining book could predict the future,
Was in this devil's hands.
The magic book,
Was called Kula ①.
He could use pebbles and scapula to divine,
He still had many other capabilities.

A man called Junnare,
Was famous for scapula divination most,
He also could divine through scattered pebbles.
Wizard Yelinga was another man,
Could divine accurately.

They competed for their divining capabilities,
Every three years,
And reported to Qingersh Khan,
What would happen in following three years.

They wore silk gowns given by Qingersh,
And went back on steeds given by Qingersh.
Karamark people remembered firmly,
Their predictions and enlightenments.

Erenkuduke and Arokai,
Garrisoned Nalun together.
They worked hand in glove,
And stir up conspiracy unceasingly.

One day,
Erenkuduke said to Arokai:
"Your Excellency Arokai Khan,

① Kula : A divining book that used for practicing divination by Karamark people.

In the near future,
Your good fortune will come to an end,
And our stipend will be finished as well.
You will be forced to leave,
And hide yourself in Kangayi.

"Your son Kunwuer Bayi,
Will rule the famous city Begin①.
But an evenly-matched hero will emerge among Kirgiz,
He will bring both you and Kunwuer drowned disaster,
His heroic name will be widely spread.
Not only Karamark,
Even Ketay will bow and scrape before him."

These words put Arokai in a great tizzy,
He reported to Qingersh immediately.
Qingersh sent his soldiers,
To call Erenkuduke and Junnare,
Asked them to divine carefully,
With scapula and pebbles.

"Your Excellency Qingersh Khan,
Let us pour out our prediction:
There will be a strong opponent,
Born among Kirgiz in southwest,
He will pledge his life to resist us.
We can't know who will be his mother,
But our blood will definitely run under his feet."

This news came to Qingersh,
As a head-on blow.
He buried the annoying bad news,
Deep in his heart.

He sent cavalries,

① Begin: Capital of Khitan. Researchers were all in favor that it referred to Linhuang, Capital of Liao Dynasty, which located in today's Inner Mongolia.

To Arokai's camp.
Asked Arokai to set off at once,
And killed all Kirgiz pregnant women.

Most barbarous Arokai,
Wore his battle robe with coat of iron mail on the outside,
And ordered his soldiers:
"Assemble all the Kirgiz pregnant women together,
Must with nobody leave out!"
Then he sent soldiers to search from door to door.

In Sari Arka and Nalun,
In Berikart and Kotuliuk,
Every place where Kirgiz lived,
All women were gathered together.

Pregnant women lined up in great panic,
Their bellies were cut open and intestines flew out,
Their wombs were taken out,
And thrown in wilderness to be eaten by wild dogs.
Thousands of pregnant women,
Were disemboweled while still alive.

They could never hear child again,
Karamark tried in vain to make Kirgiz die without issue.
Prestigious Kirgiz elders,
Interceded for pregnant women with Qingersh one after another.

Tears flew down along their beard,
They had to present resplendent brocade and silk to Karamark.
Also presented fur and fine horses,
And treasures piled up like a mountain,
Carried by strong camels.

Qingersh inquired strictly,
And asked servant to bring him holy Kula:
"Which woman on earth

Will give birth to this hero?"
He forced prophets to tell him the truth.

Junnare didn't dare to say any word,
Erenkuduke had to explain the divination in details:
"It's true that a hero will be born,
But which women on earth will bear him,
We can't tell clearly now.

"Your Excellency Qingersh Khan,
What I can tell you now,
Is the feature of the child,
Please issue orders to all your territory leaders.

"If a boy is born,
Please check his palms.
When he is born,
There will be a blood clot in one of his palm,
And some fat in the other.
In the centre of his palm,
The print of a word 'Manas',
Can be seen easily and clearly."

Heard this, Qingersh felt worried,
And gave a severe order immediately:
"Must unconditionally prohibit Kirgiz people,
From living separately with neighbors,
Put five households in a group and live together.
Send a Karamark to live with them,
To be their monitor.

"Must know clearly the number of pregnant women,
Wherever a new baby is born,
Check his palm carefully.
Once find our enemy Manas,
Kill him without the slightest hesitation.
To those Kirgiz elders who come to plead,

Pull out his tongue if anyone says too much."

After giving the order,
Qingersh still felt apprehensive:
"Where on earth the child will be born?
When on earth he will be born?"

But all Kirgiz smiled,
When they heard of the news about Manas.
Let's stop it here,
And talk about hero Manas,
And how he was born.

Born of Hero Manas

Climbed over Bariskon mountain chain,
And arrived in Kunse prairie.
Land was fertile, herbage was lush,
Jagurp worked hard on the prairie day and night.

He raised considerable number of livestock,
But he still wore a distressed expression all day:
"This old man doesn't have any child",
Karamark sneers made him feel as if ten thousand arrows had
Pierced his heart.

He inquired experienced elders,
He sought help for knowledgeable people.
Whenever met elders or youth,
He expressed his cherished desire of being a father respectfully.

Jagurp heard of a strange thing,
More than twice.

Elders told Jagurp:
"From time immemorial,
There is a popular practice known widely:
Let an old ox with a rent nostril,
Carry bags and a shabby yurt,
Let your wife follow the ox to the forest,
Let her feel miserable and lonely by such sufferings.

"Treat her coldly,
Let her lie in forest with no care.

'Let her feel shamed and desolate,
And she can only bear a child then.'
You can have a try."

For so many people said with one voice,
Jagurp lay awake all night, turning restlessly.
Then he led a black ox with a rent nostril along,
Put a shabby yurt on its back,
Sent with poor Qierdy together,
Deep in Kunse forest.

Received full leather bag of yogurt,
And simple meal frequently,
Occasionally some meat,
But Qierdy felt lonely and scared.

She was always on tenterhooks,
Tearful during daytime,
And sleepless till midnight.
One night, in her dream,
The scene of her wedding night reappeared vividly before her eyes,
Made her blood boil.

The next day, she got up early,
Took a bath in limpid spring.
"Whether Jagurp comes today or not!"
She looked around anxiously.
Beautiful hair hanging about the shoulders,
Couldn't cover her sorrow of having no child.
Poor her was waiting for Jagurp earnestly,
When he just arrived.

From legend,
Jagurp had learned a thing,
From knowledgeable people,
He had heard this again and again:

"Husband should knit eyebrows and look serious,
Whenever stands in front of his wife;
Treat her coldly,
With no mercy.
Always observe from her eyes,
If she is pregnant,
She must be in buoyant spirit and wreathed in smiles."

Jagurp found,
Happiness were in his wife Qierdy's eyes,
She combed her beautiful hair slowly,
While smile climbed on her face carelessly from time to time.

Jagurp threw away his indifference,
And asked Qierdy gently.
She told her husband in details,
About her dream.

Hearing it,
Jagurp packed up immediately,
Returned his village.
Qierdy was pregnant this year,
And looked more beautiful than before.

Qierdy was big with child,
It was an astonishing bad news for Karamark;
Its headman dropped in her house inquiringly,
Observed in the village every day.

Every time the headman dropped in,
Jagurp pretended to welcome warmly.
Served the headman delicious food submissively,
And presented swarms of cattle and sheep as well.

Mare milk and vintage wine,
Filled up leather bags,
Were taken away and enjoyed by Karamark,

Jagurp made his demand timely:

"Kunse is too small,
And has no good grazing land.
You also know clearly,
One's dignity depends on the number of his livestock.

"Bulunto sea is vast in territory,
It's a suitable place for procreating livestock.
It's my ideal grazing land,
I want to move there, please."

Jagurp curried favor with Karamark headmen,
Finally got their permission,
Together with his neighbors and labors,
Herded all their livestock to Bulunto,
He adapted to new life soon,
The number of livestock increased rapidly.

Bulunto was once called Actokoy,
Jagurp changed its name to Bulunto① later,
After he lived there.

The reason for his changing of the name,
Was meaningful:
After he moved there, life became better and better,
His wife bore him a daughter,
And then a son.

The boy was not only Jagurp's successor,
But also the indestructible pillar,
For all Arashi people,
From the time of Ugus Khan.
The name "Bulunto" became popular,
And Actokoy was forgotten gradually.

① Bulunto: Its original name was Aktokoy. Jagurp named it Bulunto after he moved there. It means a forest can change fate or a forest can bring luck and good fortune.

Livestock became flourishing,
As clouds full in the sky.
Herdsmen surrounded,
Came to seek Jagurp's patronage,
And Berita moved to be his neighbor.

Berita captured Qierdy,
When she was fourteen.
And brought her up,
So Qierdy called Akberita elder brother.
Qierdy could only marry Jagurp,
Because he was the eldest son in Berita's family.

Qierdy was going to give birth soon,
Jagurp became quite restless from anxiety:
Bear a boy please,
No, better a girl.
He prayed piously day and night.

A girl was born,
Jagurp was still very happy,
And named his daughter Kardhachy.

Three years passed,
Jagurp talked to himself:
"Qierdy maybe adapt to traditional method,
Whether I follow the rule again,
Put her in forest,
To get my expecting son.
If I am fortunately enough to have a son,
I can have all my property inherited."

Once again,
Jagurp began to test,
That magic legend.
He made a new yurt,
And sent Qierdy to desolate forest.

There was a Uzbek woman in his village,
She was a lonely widow,
Lived with her poor son.
Jagurp gave the boy a horse,
And asked him to deliver meals to Qierdy.

When the boy went in the depths of the forest,
He found forty mysterious teenagers by accident.
There were still some people cutting firewood and hunting,
In the forest at the moment.

Hunters laid traps,
To catch pheasants.
Someone else shipped the horse and released falcon,
To catch wild duck and wild goose.
These people has seen by themselves,
Lion-like forty teenagers.

The boy returned to the herd village,
As soon as he finished his task,
He told Jagurp clearly,
What he had seen in the forest.

Jagurp felt suspicious and surprising,
He rode on a steed and went towards the forest,
To see with his own eyes.
When arrived,
He saw a crowd of teenagers faintly,
But failed to see their faces obviously.

At the edge of the forest,
Jagurp met some people returned from the forest.
One of them was Adlebek,
A white-beard old man,
He was very prestigious in Ayinla[①].

① Ayinla: It means herd village in Kirgiz language.

He was of similar age,
And neighbor with Jagurp.

"Hey, distinguished Jagurp Bayi,
Your livestock has spread all over the prairie,
Why you cover up the truth all the time,
You have already had a teenage son?

"I came across forty teenagers in the forest,
They led red deer with antler and frolicked in the wood,
I asked the leader of them.

"Before he spoke a word,
A boy with flushed face beside him,
Revealed me the truth:
'He is Jagurp's son,
His name is Manas,
He is an exceptional hero.
We are his forty warriors,
May I ask, where are you from?"

"I was so surprised after hearing this,
That couldn't help being tearful.
I wiped away my tears and wanted to look searchingly,
They had disappeared."

Hearing Adlebek's remarks,
Jagurp felt more puzzled.
He had one daughter only,
The fact of having no son,
Annoyed him all the time.

Jagurp was unable to give Adlebek an answer,
So he foamed with rage,
And answered back:
"Adlebek, how could you say such a thing,
I have a son named Manas,

He led forty teenagers,
Played in this forest.

"Adlebek, there is no need for you to sneer me?
I am a poor old man without a son.
Nobody fails to know it!"

Jagurp couldn't help being angry,
And raising his whip at Adlebek,
But he sighed and laid down the whip,
Before it nearly fell on Adlebek's shoulder.

Adlebek turned his horse round and went away,
Jagurp stood there blankly in a loss:
That boy told him such a thing,
Even the elder Adlebek told him the same thing,
A young boy and an old man,
Whether he could believe their words or not.

"Khuda①, how stingy you are,
You granted forest children, mountains offspring,
Why you exclude me,
Such a lonely and aged man?

"Everyone laughed at sonless me,
How can this be my fate?
If I let my wife keep living in the forest,
They will sneer me forever.

"Whether I should let Qierdy come back herd village?
It's getting dark today,
I am going to pick her up recently."
Jagurp went back home hesitatingly.

Words from the boy and the elder kept ringing in his ears,

① Khuda: Its literal meaning is Allah in Kirgiz language. But in this epic, it has broad meanings, like the Creator, god, dominator of the world and so on.

Jagurp trembled in fear.
"If that can't keep the secret,
And tell others about what he saw.
If Karamark people hear of it,
They must kill me.

"Adlebek is prudent and cool-headed,
He will not gossip."
Jagurp maintained the boy was not reliable,
So he asked servants to lead his Schuyruk①.

It was an untamed horse,
Jagurp put a saddle and a bridle loosely on the horse.
"Go ahead, my boy!"
He led the horse himself with the boy on its back,
To search in the forest together.

He led the horse in the depths of the forest:
"Nobody sees us,
Except the horse,
So no one can cast doubts on me."

He thought over and over again,
Then let go the reins.
The runaway untamed horse dashed ahead,
And the boy was tumbled down the horse to death soon.

Jagurp ran back home hurriedly,
Under cover of night.

Bakdolet, a widow,
Worked as a servant for Jagurp.
So he asked her,
To call Markdume, the boy's mother,
To his yurt.

① Schuyruk: Transliterate from Kirgiz language, means violent or untamed horse.

Jagurp treated Markdume,
With due respect.
In the still of night,
When others left one after another,
Jagurp told her the fact of her son's death:

"Allah has determined all our things in advance,
Whoever can escape from his fate?
I let your son chase scattered camels,
But your poor boy,
Was tumbled to death down the untamed horse."

Jagurp's words,
Like a bolt from the blue,
Hit Markdume.
She bursted into cries,
As if the sky collapsed on her shoulder,
As if her blood vessels cracked.

Markdume cried her eyes out,
Her heartbroken cries,
Woke Adlebek up with a start,
He got up immediately.
Walked to Jagurp's yurt quickly,
And extended sympathy to Markdume.

All the villagers scared,
That Karamark heard it,
They tried their utmost to keep the secret.
They were filled with fear,
Jagurp was also anxious,
No one knew what would happen to them.

It was Allah's decree,
The dead boy,
Didn't tell his mother,

What he had seen in the forest.

How lucky Jagurp was,
Markdume knew nothing,
About the whole thing,
She did whatever Jagurp said.

Adlebek was busy acting as go-between,
For Jagurp and Markdume,
"Jagurp Bayi, please,
Let me tell you a fact.

"If you compensate her with livestock,
She can be deceived for a short time,
If you compensate her with money,
It will only be stalling tactics as well.

"Once all your compensation is run out,
The helpless mother,
Will always bother you,
For demanding her son.

"Now she is just over thirty years old,
She is still beautiful,
She is affectionate as well.

"And your livestock are as many,
As the grass on prairie.
Your wealth is as high as mountains,
You can never use them up.

"So you'd better marry her,
To comfort her traumatized soul,
To allay your guilt."
Jagurp had to agree the marriage.
Adlebek came and persuaded Markdume then,
With sweet words:

"Markdume, poor woman,
I must speak to your face.

"You don't have family members around you,
You don't have a partner to care you either,
Now even your son died by accident,
How can you live your rest life?

"I can give you an advice:
You cry yourself hoarse these two days,
And ask him for your son day and night,
Let him fail to rest and sleep.

"You accept neither his money,
His steeds,
Nor his camels.
Make him have no choice,
But marry you at last,
You will thereupon lead a wealthy life."

Hearing this, Markdume fell into a trance for a while,
And considered secretly:
"What he said is very reasonable."
She agreed with his advice in her heart.

Markdume cried painfully for three days,
And shouted round the clock:
"Where are you, my poor only son?"
She asked Jagurp to return her son.

Adlebek moved between Markdume and Jagurp,
Read "Nikai"① for their marriage,
Comforted Markdume's sorrow.
Markdume began to enjoy her new life,
And forget her sadness of losing her son,

① Nikai: It's the custom of Muslim to read scripture for those who get married.

Gradually,
All her sorrow melted away.

Markdume bore two sons,
Sirk and Sirak,
For whom I will chant again and again.
They were both heroes,
They were good fellows of Manas,
Their story will come later.

Suddenly,
The hearsay spread in the village quickly;
"Manas, Karamark's future enemy,
Was found in the forest."
Jagurp made a prompt decision,
And controlled the spread of the news.

Two or three days later,
Jagurp packed up,
And went to the forest at Qierdy's side.
They, together,
Demolished the shabby yurt.

He drove the black ox,
Put the yurt on its back,
And they returned home,
At dusk.

Karamark people read from divining book,
"Manas is going to be born."
They walked more frequently in the herd village,
They heard faintly,
About someone played in the forest.

Jagurp invited men and women,
Old and young to his yurt,
Neighbors and clansmen kept pouring in,

All the old with high esteem and undisputed reputation,
Especially the old like Adlebek,
Came to his yurt.

Jagurp asked servants,
To butcher white-forehead sheep generously,
For the praying ceremony.
Let the old pray,
For peaceful life.

Gathered all the respectable elders,
To his yurt.
Served them,
All kinds of delicious food,
Till no one was willing to look at the food.

Neighbors all went back home in midnight,
Except those elders.
Jagurp began to say to them,
With a solemn mien:
"Respectable Adlebek,
What you had told me,
Make me disturbed in mind.

"You said I have a son named Manas,
How shameful I am?
Nobody fails to know I have only a daughter,
Who has seen a second child in my family?
So you must apologize to me in the presence of all.

"Should I, such a lonely old man,
Bear such shame?
I can't imagine,
That I could raise my head again in this life."

Adlebek had a glib tongue,
His words made everyone presence ease:

"How long can a person live?
He can't decide by himself.

"Manas will be born in this world soon,
Karamark spies in our village,
Are sniffing about everything now.
How can I say fictitious words,
At this very moment?

"It's Khuda's decree,
We will notice some portents.
Hero Manas,
Will probably be born in your family.

"Because that boy said to me himself,
Their head is Jagurp's son.
Is you think I just spread a rumor,
You can recall all the things happened recently carefully,
What happened in the forest is definitely true,
That's all what I can say."

The conversation between Jagurp and Adlebek,
Made every old man presence,
Surprised enough.
They held their own collars tightly①:

"Khuda, how magic it is,
Let Bulunto god bless, please!"
They sat silently,
And went back home one after another in contemplation.

When they were back home,
They locked doors,
And spoke without stopping, In a low voice.
Then no one mentioned it in public,

① Hold one's own collar tightly: When Kirgiz people feel surprised, they behave like this.

To not generate Karamark's doubt.

Anyone could never guess Allah's decree,
Qierdy was three months pregnant,
It was not a short time,
But she didn't become aware of it at all.

When the fourth month came,
She began to vomit yellow water every day,
She was lawn and looked sallow.

Jagurp kept her company every day,
And inquired with concern anxiously:
"How do you on earth feel?
Tell me your feeling.
You look pale,
And fail to stop vomiting,
Why?
Please tell me!

"You become thin and weak,
What happened?
Please tell me the truth.
We are an affectionate couple,
Please don't hold back facts from me."

It seemed that Qierdy reminded something,
She said to Jagurp:
"Jagurp, you have the most livestock,
You provide me a comfortable life.
I don't want to taste any,
Even you butcher all your livestock.
What I want to eat is hard to look for in this world,
You can't find it though I tell you."

Hearing this,
Jagurp asked anxiously:

"Oh, my dear wife,
What kind of things can beat me in this world?
If I can't find what you want to eat,
It must be in heavenly palace.

"Any wild game you want to eat,
So long as you give an order,
All clansmen will go and hunt for you.
Even the most precious object in the world,
I can also find it in the twinkling of an eye.
Everything always goes well with me,
Once I take an action, I must get what I want."

Qierdy disrupted Jagurp:
"My husband Jagurp Bayi,
You are always ready to say your livestock.
But where can you go and look for,
What I want to eat?

"Since you asked me, I will speak my mind,
Please listen carefully.
Although I always feel fretful and fidgety,
A beautiful melody,
Keeps ringing in my ears.

"Phoenix high in the sky,
Are flying freely.
If its eyeballs,
Can fall into my mouth,
My fretful heart will be comforted.

"There are so many beasts of prey among animals,
Which one lingers on my mind?
Jagurp, please listen carefully,
Now, the heart of tiger,
Is the delicious food for which I am eager.
And if I can eat lion's tongue,

All my vexation will fly away.

"How could you get all these things?
I don't know, Jagurp,
It's only a dream,
It's hopeless."

As soon as she finished her words,
Qierdy felt sick,
A stream of acid liquid ran out of her mouth.

"Where should I seek for these things?"
Jagurp suddenly realized the world was too small,
He didn't have any idea at all.
He thought long and hard,
But he was still at a loss.

"There are tigers and lions,
On the wilderness of Bulunto sea area,
So long as I don't grudge spending money,
And presenting fine horses generously,
The brave men, warriors,
And hunters who are good at laying traps,
Must catch tigers and lions for me,
My wife can be saved.

"But only one thing is difficult to achieve,
No one could find divine bird Aripkara①,
In this world!
Adlebek is my bosom friend,
I can ask him for help."

Jagurp went out his yurt,
Walked towards village entrance.

① Divine bird Aripkara: Arip means great and giant in Kirgiz language. Kara refers to black. Aripkara means giant black bird.

He waved to Adlebek,
Asked Adlebek to meet out the village,
They sat on grass shoulder by shoulder.

Jagurp told Adlebek word by word,
The three objects Qierdy wanted to eat.
They turned it over and over in their mind,
But it was too difficult for them,
To get a good idea.

It was really a thorny problem,
Common people could never achieve it.
They racked their brains:
All things on earth could be found,
Except this divine bird Aripkara.

After careful consideration,
Adlebek said with full confidence:
"Jagurp Bayi, my bosom friend,
Please throw your worry away and rest assured,
Tigers and lions must be hunted in the forest.

"Giant Berita is knowledgeable and experienced,
We can't hide the problem from him,
It has no good for us,
I must ride to him right away,
Ask him for help.
Please get everything ready for him,
He will accomplish it!"

Adlebek didn't go back home,
But set off immediately.
He whipped his horse to run faster,
As if he was a youth of hot blood,
The horse was wet through.

Adlebek was nearly out of breath,

When he stood in face of Berita:
"Your sister will bear a boy,
He will be a hero shining through the ages,
It's not the remote myth,
It's not the recent legend, either."
Adlebek told all magic things to Berita,
And asked him for Suyinchy①.

Berita presented Adlebek generously,
A fine horse with a saddle on its back.
"The problem you said is not very difficult,
But it causes a little bit trouble like hawk catches rabbit."
He asked his wife fetched him a fist-size leather bag,
He hid it in the bosom,
Rode a horse to Jagurp's Ayinla with Adlebek.

Jagurp invited all neighbors and villagers,
People busted and horses neighed,
The quiet Ayinla turned into a scene of jubilation.
Jagurp called all hunters together,
And assigned tasks to them.

Adlebek stood,
By the side of Berita and Jagurp;
Kapchaque Bayi came in a hurry,
To ask the whole story.

These four persons walked together,
Into Qierdy's yurt.
They sat around the dining cloth,
After Jagurp's explanation,
Berita continued the talk,
As a general who devises strategies in his tent.
"Jagurp Bayi, Kapchaque Bayi,

① Suyinchy: It's one of the Kirgiz traditional customs, namely gift for announcing good news. When there are good news on having a child, gaining fortune and so on, the person who announces the good news to the lucky person's relatives can ask for some amount of money as a gift. This amount of money is called "Suyinchy".

And our bosom friend Adlebek,
The problem is,
Not as hard as going up in the sky.

"Karamark spies in the herd village,
Watch us at all times.
We must plan,
Cautiously and secretly.

"You should invite all Karamark headmen,
To set off with us,
Let them believe strongly,
It's just an action of hunting.

"Khuda has presented you,
Too much gold and silver,
Your horses spread all over the hillside,
Your cattle walk around the flood land,
And your camels are full in Gobi desert,
So, Jagurp, this time,
You must be very generous.

"You must agree with me:
We should choose expert marksmen,
To go with us;
Whoever shoots a tiger,
Present him a camel,
And a fine horse with gold saddle and silver stirrup,
Besides,
Your blessing and your gratitude.

"Whoever shoots a lion,
Present him a hundred sheep,
Forty mares,
And appreciate him as a hero.
If a warrior catch a lion or a tiger,
Please present him ten cows,

As his food in winter,
To promise him a comfortable winter.

"You should pray sincerely,
For your son coming to this world early.
If you don't have any son,
Your treasure will be a total waste,
Who else can inherit it?"

Jagurp was completely convinced by Berita,
He announced the prize in public.
"Anyone who shoot a tiger or a lion,
I will give him steeds, camels,
And money as award."
The poor were excited,
The news of hunting spread fast.

Adlebek and Akberita took the lead,
Jagurp followed.
Totally around five hundred people,
Came from all corners.
They set off from Bulunto sea,
Acted according their plan,
Looked for beasts in the forest.

"Shooting tigers and lions can get big award."
How tempting the wealth was.
All the people tried their utmost to seek.

They didn't cherish their horses at all,
Fell over each other to run forward,
And surrounded the forest completely,
The mysterious forest lost its quietness at once.

The forest was seldom trodden by people,
They never tried to read it,
And they never knew what's in it.

Undulating sound of shouting,
Awakened the silent forest.
Firelocks discharged thunderously,
Sound of drums reverberated in the air,
Hunting dogs barked, falcons flied and landed in quick succession.

Lizards and yellow weasels squeaked,
And fled helter-skelter.
It was never so noisy in the forest,
Animals fled all around in great panic.

What a spectacular sight,
Appeared in front of them.
Frightened jackals and wolves rushed out of the forest,
Seldom seen wild camels,
Emerged in the forest as well.

Wild horses and wild oxen ran out of the forest,
Crowds of does and stags,
Stampeded in the forest.
All male and female gazelles stuck their tails up,
Ran away in all directions.
Young people shot with firelocks and arrows quickly,
Without the time for aiming.

The hunting lasted from dawn to dark,
The forest experienced an unprecedented catastrophe.
Hunters gave full play to their abilities,
They shot two tigers, two lions,
And thirty wolves.
All animals they hunted,
Piled up like a mountain in the wilderness.

"I need only lions and tigers,
All rest quarries are useless for me.
But I must present every one livestock and money,

How distressed I am!"

Jagurp was burning with anxiety,
When he didn't get the beasts;
But when hunters came back with plenty,
He began to hesitate,
And didn't want to give hunters what he had promised:

"Should my wealth flow away like running water,
Just for Qierdy will have a baby?"
Jagurp didn't dare to take back his promise flagrantly,
But he wasn't willing to make good his promise either,
He was really in a dilemma.

Finally he kept his promise,
Awarded those hunters,
They were very grateful.

Berita and Adlebek didn't have to care about other things,
They disemboweled tiger and took out tiger's heart.
They broke lion's jaw bones,
And pulled its tongue out.

A giant person, a respectable elder,
Rode on their horses quickly.
Whipped the horses with full strength,
And ran to the herd village.

Berita came in a hurry,
And instructed others:
"Light a fire quickly,
And boil water the pot."
He cut tigers hearts and lions tongues into pieces,
And put them into boiling water.
He asked Qierdy to come,
And eat the hearts and tongues up.
Then he took out a bag from his bosom,

And put it in Qierdy's hand:
"Oh, my dear sister Qierdy,
I have kept this carefully,
Since my father Onuzdo Khan was still alive.

"Onuzdo Khan was a giant,
Enemies were in awe of him and dare not invade.
People from remote places,
Came and paid their respect to him.

"It's definitely true,
That these are phoenix's eyeballs;
The king of Urum City,
Presented it to my father.

"Father gave it to mother,
And asked her to keep carefully.
When it is needed,
Takes out immediately.

"Mother sewed it into her apron,
And kept it through her life.
It was put in my hand,
When loving mother passed away.

"Jagurp sent a person to tell me,
That you want to eat nothing.
Hearing that,
I realized,
You must be pregnant,
So I put it into my bosom.

"Phoenix is the king of all the birds,
Its eyes are bright and sharp incomparably.
Now, please taste this,
The eyeballs of phoenix."

Qierdy was wild with joy:
"My dream comes true,
Thanks very much, my dear brother!"
After Qierdy finished eating,
Berita rode back his home.

When he arrived home,
He took out that red book,
Read and studied carefully,
Finally he concluded happily:
"This is just hero Manas."

He thought and spoke to himself:
"Jagurp is narrow-minded,
Manas is not an ordinary,
It can't be smooth for his coming into the world.
I'd better move and be his neighbor,
It will be convenient for me to take care of Qierdy."

Berita made up his mind,
And moved to a village near Jagurp's.
Nine months had passed,
Qierdy couldn't move anymore with a ball-like body,
The day for giving a birth was coming.

Qierdy could only lie in bed,
Since she was five months pregnant.
Jagurp was looking forward to having a son,
To having a hero,
He took his utmost to care Qierdy.
He butchered a strong pony every three days,
To provide more nutrition for her.

No matter how meticulous Jagurp was,
Qierdy was still frail and weak.
She couldn't get out of bed,
To entertain visiting guests.

The elders, led by Adlebek,
Gathered in Jagurp's yurt.
Qierdy said to their face,
Her considerations:
"Respectable elders presence,
I had to say directly to you.
I have been sick for such a long time,
I can't care the household affairs.
Your Jagurp Bayi,
Has been exhausted both mentally and physically as well.

"If you think my words are reasonable,
Please accept it.
If I die from bearing the child,
Who will be the hostess of the family?
One of my foot stands in this world,
But the other one has already stepped into the hell."

Akberita brought Qierdy to his family,
Then married her to Jagurp,
And presided over her wedding ceremony in person.

So Qierdy said to Akberita:
"The maid servant stood there,
Was presented by you, maybe you still remember,
She is a Karacha, named Bakdolet,
Her father is a rich man,
Who else has such an eminent status?

"She is the right girl to marry Jagurp,
Please be the witness for their marriage.
Once I cease to live,
Let Bakdolet be in charge of the household affairs.

"Don't let her cry for her servant status,
Let Jagurp marry her soon.
'Dear sister, how you could die!'

Let her cry for my death in this way.

"Although Jagurp has married Markdume,
She never stays at home to care the family,
Since she came to this family,
She only herds horses on hillsides every day.
They are a titular couple,
And actually she never behaved as a wife."

Qierdy's advice,
Was agreed by all elders,
For marrying Bakdolet,
Jagurp also had no opposition.

Butchered stout ponies for the wedding,
Married such a young girl,
Jagurp was very happy.

Qierdy felt unbearable of the pain,
She ate nothing for some days,
Labor pains intensified from time to time.

They had practiced many folk ways,
Followed Kirgiz customs:
Killed lambs, (kid of goat)
Patted top of Qierdy's head with hot lung of lamb,
To ward off evil and strange disease.

Killed strong ox, cut its meat into pieces,
Gave the poor money in charity;
Presented plates of flour to villagers,
All these couldn't ease Qierdy's pains.

"Someone knows midwifery."
People gave rise to much discussion.
Regardless of men or women,

The old or the youth,
More than fifty people were invited,
To hasten child delivery for Qierdy.

Visiting guests every day,
Could eat a mare's meat up.
Jagurp was also generous,
Treated guests genuinely.

They usually didn't have the right to sit on the seat of honor,
Didn't have the chance to taste other family's mare milk,
The poor herdsmen,
They sat on the seat of honor now with exception.

Tied cotton on the top wooden pole,
Opened skylight on the left of the yurt.
"That woman is experienced,
That woman has super strength."
People gathered around Jagurps yurt,
Waited and discussed.

"My arms have been numb."
The youth and strong women,
Took turns continuously.

"The baby is coming out!"
All of them were in great bustle,
At least sixty ladies,
Massaged and pressed in turns,
To help Qierdy give birth quickly.
They put Qierdy into a cradle and shook it,
Put her on a carpet and rocked her.

After fifteen days,
The child finally came to this world.
Without hearing the cry of the child,
Qierdy had been tired out.

Everyone was curious,
They looked towards the baby.
"Hey, what's this?
This is not a lucky thing!"
Women's surprising shouting,
Was heard by Jagurp.

"Adlebek,
My bosom friend,
I am all anxiety,
These women will come out of the yurt,
To ask for gift money from me.

"But they shouted so loudly now,
Made my strain of thought confused.
Please go and have a look by yourself,
Report to me as soon as possible."

Adlebek went into the yurt,
He didn't see the baby,
But only a black leather bag,
He then reported to Jagurp in a great rush.

Jagurp felt worried,
So he asked Adlebek to invite Karamark headman.
"You said Jagurp's wife would give birth to Manas,
So you watched in the village every day.
As a Karamark headman,
You are knowledgeable.
Please go without delay,
To look what has actually happened."

Karamark headman went into the yurt hurriedly,
The leather bag made him surprised a lot,
He rushed out at once,
And raved unintelligible gibberish.
He felt stiff in his tongue,

He couldn't say any word clearly.

Jagurp sent Adlebek,
To report to Berita post haste,
He walked in his yurt hurriedly,
But dare not hold the leather bag in arms.

Jagurp was in an agitated mood,
He didn't know what to do;
He looked depressed,
Signs of despair climbed on his face.

"Villagers always sneer me, a sonless old man,
How Allah can laugh at me, too,
Like my villagers!"
Jagurp was totally at a loss,
He walked to and fro without any idea.

Adlebek went away immediately,
He told Berita in details,
What he had seen,
And what they had discussed.

The world is full of magic.
Akberita understood it at once.
He rode to the herd village immediately,
He took a pure gold earring along with him,
When he left home.

Akberita was dripped with sweat happily,
He covered half-day journey,
Within the time of drinking a bowl of yogurt.
The noisy crowds,
Made way for Berita in the middle.
He walked in the yurt:
"Even leaves of Chinese parasol have shriveled,
It will have luxuriant foliage as long as its root is left.

"You noisy idiots,
Upset Qierdy greatly.
Go out now!
Don't stand in the yurt."

He drove all spectators out,
Turned around and said to Jagurp:
"This is Khuda's bestowal,
He is the magic boy in the leather bag!
Please carry a cloth bag and go out quickly,
Don't let others discover.

"Out the herd village,
Dogs are barking,
Catch two puppies back,
Don't let others discover."

Jagurp, in a hurry,
Went out secretly with a cloth bag.
He saw two white puppies,
He caught them,
And squeezed them in the bag quickly.

After seeing two puppies,
Akberita cut the surface of the black leather bag with his gold earring.
A baby was discovered in leather bag,
From his appearance,
He looked like a nine-year-old child.

Akberita checked the baby's palms,
There was blood clot in his left hand,
And fat in his right hand.
His abnormal appearance and manner,
Showed strength and charisma of conquering the world.

"Bakdolet, come here,
Wrap the baby up."

Bakdolet ran to the baby with a piece of cloth in her hand,
She wrapped the baby up quickly.
She stretched hands under the baby,
Tried to hold the baby.

The heavy baby,
Made her fail to hold.
Her eyes were opened wide, her teeth were clenched,
With full of strength,
She held the baby in her arms barely.

The baby was so heavy,
That her waist was nearly broken.
"Oh, what on earth happened?
The baby stretched his leg slightly,
I felt my waist is going to break!"

Hearing this,
Big smiles climbed on Qierdy's tiring face.
"Hey, Bakdolet,
Let me breastfeed him!"

Bakdolet held the baby barely,
Put him in Qierdy's arms,
Then covered the mother and the baby,
With thick quilt.

Akberita put two puppies into the leather bag,
Renewed the bag to its former state.
He sent servant to invite Karamark headmen,
He cut the leather bag again,
In the face of these two Karamark headmen.

What they found in the bag was not a baby,
But two similar puppies.
They pulled the puppies out of the bag,
"They are dogs, not a baby!"

All people presence were surprised enough.

A puppy barked,
Jumped up and threw itself on Karamark headman.
"Hey, Berita, why do you invite us to come?
The puppies will wolf down my luck!
Qierdy bears such a monster,
It can make me unlucky.

" 'Jagurp's wife bears two puppies!"
People gossip and I am a witness,
What a shame!"

Two puppies shared same color,
They killed one of them,
To hold "Sadha"① rite,
For the faint Karamark headman.
Someone picked a piece of felt,
Which had turned yellow from wilderness,
Ignited it and moved it round and round over his head,
To make him come back to life.

The faint headman came to,
Opened his eyes and looked around;
Then he rushed out of Jagurp's yurt,
With greatest fear.

On his way home,
He wasn't yet recovered from fright,
From time to time,
He couldn't help speaking to himself,
Or shouting loudly,
To let others drive puppies away.

"I can't stay in this village any longer!"

① Sadha: A traditional Kirgiz rite used for warding off evils.

He put all his bags on the back of two steeds,
Fled away from the village hurriedly.
Karamark headman ran away from Ayinla,
Seeing his extremely awkward situation,
Villagers laughed happily.

For the past few days, people came to congratulate,
Crowded in Jagurp's yard.
They swarmed into his yurt,
Left none outside.

Rich Jagurp Bayi,
Lacked nothing in his family.
For the child's feeding ceremony,
Qierdy, the hostess,
Prepared forty leather bags' butter.
Other things needed,
Were also prepared well in advance.

Women went into the yurt,
With butter on their arms.
"This is the tradition left by our ancestors."
They smeared butter into the baby's mouth,
Let him taste his first mouthful of food.

When the baby tasted butter,
He began to shout and scream,
His loud sound rose right towards sky,
A hailstorm dropped suddenly.

The rest beasts in the forest,
Were frightened again and escaped for a second time.
Lake water rose higher and higher,
Earth shook without stop,
Mountains rocked unceasingly.

When the baby curled his legs up,

Mountains very nearly turned upside down.
The yurt was crowded by villagers,
Two old ladies and a child among them,
Were fainted away,
By the baby's loud sound.

Villagers ate Jatirk① for celebrating the new born baby,
Then went back home one after another.
Adlebek, Berita and Jagurp Bayi,
Got the chance to speak now:
"Give the baby to us,
Let us observe carefully."

For in a muddled rush just now,
There wasn't enough time for them to watch carefully.
They unfolded the baby's palms,
In the center of his right palm——
The word "Manas" could be seen clearly.

Berita felt excited,
And spoke to others:
"Allah bestows him to us,
The name 'Manas' must be kept confidential,
Give him another name for the time being,
To avoid enemy's knives,
We can forget the name Manas right now,
And call him Chanjindy② instead."

After Berita gave the baby the new name,
The sign "Manas" in the baby's palm,
Disappeared mysteriously.

From then on,
Jagurp didn't move to mountain grazing land,

① Jatirk: It is a ceremony to celebrate a new baby's coming to the world. Jatirk meal is a special food for this ceremony.

② Chanjindy: Means big madman in Kirgiz language.

He chose to live on gentle hillsides,
Which was far away from others.

Time past quickly,
Manas was already four years old.

But he still couldn't walk,
In the age of four,
He had over five feet wide shoulders,
And a much more wide breast than ordinaries,
He couldn't walk upright,
But only staggered instead.

He experienced some changes at five,
And he was already a grown-up at six,
He could herd horses by himself.
His appetite shocked others,
Every day,
He ate a strong mare and a strong pony up.

Mare milk mixed with honey,
And golden butter,
Were his absolutely necessary food.
Such a heavy appetite,
Made stingy Jagurp's heart ache.

Manas killed cattle, horse and sheep at will,
The number of livestock decreased day after day.
Jagurp loved his wealth very much,
So he grumbled endlessly every day.

Rumors spread to Manas,
He was vexed and sad.
"I can't answer back my father,
Or others will sneer us.
Father will also be upset,
If I take other actions,

He will spare no effort to stop me."

Jagurp was grazing livestock in Balikun,
The disappointing boy decided to leave his father.
Manas climbed over Hami mountain,
Trekked along the waterless desert for several days.

When Karamark began to cut open the pregnant,
Karanuoyi moved to Turpan.
His wife bore him a son Majik there,
Majik was just eight years old at the moment.

Karanuoyi, bringing his boy Majik,
Urging swarms of sheep,
Was advanding in Gobi desert when he met Manas,
He asked Manas curiously.

"You walk on this desolate desert,
Where are you from?
You don't have anyone for company,
Who are you?"

"My father is Jagurp,
My name is Chanjindy;
We can come across in wilderness,
Where do you come from?"

Karanuoyi understood at once,
When he knew that was Jagurp's son.
"Jagurp's wife bore a boy."
He once heard of it.
He also heard,
Jagurp had moved to Balikun.

"Since you are offspring of Kirgiz,
I have already known your name,
Please go and have a rest in my yurt."

He brought Manas to his home:
"You and Majik should become sworn brothers!"

He made a spacious room,
Let Manas live in it.
Manas played with Majik for about a month,
Wheat sewing season was coming.

Manas found through his observation,
There was no river running on the ground,
No snow-capped mountains, either,
Only lines of wells buried deep under Gobi.
People lived there,
Made water wind under ground.

Manas was a boy with tremendous physical power,
Majik was of great strength too,
They dug wells as one,
Drew groundwater gurgling on.

They opened up a stretch of barren land,
Brought great cultivation with mountain-like wheat piles.
The elder, Karanuoyi,
Praised their behaviors a lot.

Jagurp finally got the news of his son,
He went to Turpan in autumn.
Knowing Jagurp's coming,
Manas didn't come out and visit his father.

Karanuoyi and Jagurp Bayi,
Warmly embraced each other;
Past events came in endless stream,
They talked all through the night.

It's hard to see vast grasslands in Turpan,
With less sheep, more goats.

Karanuoyi butchered goat,
Treated Jagurp warmly.

Karanuoyi presented forty camels,
With full bags' wheat on each back.
Jagurp drove those forty camels,
Towards Balikun prairie.

Manas recruited the poor to work,
Gave them the rest wheat as wages.
The strong young men,
Ploughed in wilderness actively.

They dug deep wells in seven places,
Brought abundant groundwater to irrigate.
They reaped bumper harvest this year,
Golden wheat grains were as many as grains of sand.

For Turpan.
He led sixty camels,
With two big bags on each back.

It's embarrassing to come empty-handed,
Jagurp brought Karanuoyi strong mares,
To return the favor;
He also urged maroon steeds,
Presented to Majik as gift.

Since moved to Turpan,
Karanuoyi had looked forward to eating mare meat,
He butchered and stewed a mare,
He was intoxicated with appetizing fragrance of meat.

Jagurp lived there for six days,
Then he packed his return bags up.
"I will come next year,

Help you move to a prairie."
Jagurp promised to Karanuoyi.

Hearing this,
Manas added in passing:

"It's not late to discuss it next year!"
He buried his idea deep in his heart.

Let us stop,
To tell another story of hero Manas,
Battle steeds, battle robes and arms,
Where they are from and how they are prepared.

Hero's Personal Mount Arckura①

Jagurp Bayi went back home,
Laid down packs carried by twenty camels,
Then packed forty camels with wheat,
Seven camels with gold, silver and precious things.
Three camels with cheese and butter,
And marched toward the domain of Qingersh.

Qingersh was quartered in Zhonkang,
Where a band of soldiers,
Was sent westward everyday.

As soon as Jagurp arrived,
Qingersh got the report of his arrival,
Asked servants to invite him in a big room,
And treat him warmly.

Jagurp rested for three days,
But Qingersh still did not call him in,
He had no choice,
But to see Qingersh lowly by himself:
"Your Majesty Qingersh Khan,
Are you in good health?
All the Kirgiz people,
Are loyal to miss you.

"I eagerly desire that,

① Arckura: Horse name in Kirgiz language. It refers to the color of hoar. Manas' steed is buff with hoar underfur, so it was named "Arckura".

Your achievements of supremacy will be more splendid,
Your great exploit will be more brilliant.
Like sunlight always floods the earth,
Your throne will be as solid as rocks.
Your fortune will be more prosperous day after day,
As the burning sulphur.

"I, Jagurp, come to visit,
Please accept my well-wishing and respect.
The presents on fifty camels,
Were specially chosen for you.

"The wheat carried by forty camels,
Was grown by ourselves with our shoulders to the collar;
What I have put into the gift box,
Was the gold, silver and precious things on those seven camels.

"And pure cheese and butter,
Carried on three camels,
Tied up with three woolen ropes tight,
And sealed in the bags.

"Although I am not very rich,
Please condescend to accept my humble present.
I come with full-hearted enthusiasm,
To plead you for my specific reason.

"Qingersh Khan,
I live a well-off life now.
It's you,
Asked us to leave Yenisey for Balkart.
It's you,
Ordered Arokai to cut open the bellies of Kirgiz pregnant women,
Let poor Kirgiz people be under your thumb,
And live a life under your order.

"You said Manas would be born,

Asked five Kirgiz households to live together,
Ordered an official for each herd village to monitor;
Kirgiz people must be very careful,
And treat them with delicious food everyday.

"Nuoyi Khan became my neighbour,
And I am his vice Khan,
But it is only an honourable title,
It has no use for me.

"Livestock is full of the prairie,
But no one can distinguish,
Which are his and which are mine.

"Barikart is too small,
So I climbed over Bariskon mountain,
And moved to Kunse prairie.
But it is not a good place for grazing horses,
Because of its high mountain, narrow valley and rushing current.
I did not stay there,
And moved to Actokoy prairie.

"I renamed Actokoy,
To a name Bulunto,
It gives me the good fortune,
That my child was born there,
Then the shame of no child went away.

"I am already old but my child is too young,
You are powerful.
So I present my livestock and gold to you,
To ask for your help and protection.

"When I lived in Actokoy,
Karamark people came to catch my horses everyday,
They never let the number of my horses increase.
In order to get rid of them,

I moved to Balikun,
But I can never forget Bulunto."

Qingersh listened to Jagurp with patience,
He accepted all the tribute unscrupulously,
Which were brought by Jagurp.
Then they began to discuss,
And made an important decision.

Between Bulunto and Chagan,
The land was vast,
Qingersh delimited this area to Jagurp,
Appointed Jagurp,
To the Khan of this area.

Jagurp Bayi became a real Khan,
He was moving to his new enfeoffment.
From Balikun to Altay area,
With the dust raised by livestock all over the sky.

On the way of moving,
Jagurp talked to himself:
"This area is best for me,
It is near Kirgiz area,
Echo with Akberita in a distance,
And live together with Kazakh people.
Manas will not a person can keep his nose clean,
When he grows up.
If he is in trouble,
All these neighbours will help."

Let's go back to the visit to Qingersh,
Jagurp met Qingersh Khan,
Got the letter of attorney,
And fulfilled his dream eventually.

"I should go back now if you permit."

Jagurp said to Qingersh,
And led all camels he brought to the yard,
Without taking any of them back.

Qingersh said:
"Hi, Jagurp!
You have been appointed Khan,
How can you go back empty-handed?

"I can accept your wheat and gold and silver,
I do not need your camels,
You need them in livestock transition and moving,
For carrying yurts and sundries.

"You can choose a steed from my horses to ride,
And a first-class brocade robe from my storage to wear."

Qingersh took out nine brocade robes,
And pulled out nine steeds.
Let Jagurp choose,
But Jagurp refused them all.

"How can I let you go back empty-handed?"
Qingersh persuaded Jagurp sincerely,
But Jagurp was thinking of another thing.

Jagurp was advised by Berita repeatedly:
"There is a fine steed that will be Manas' personal mount,
That is a hoar horse colt.
If your son is lucky enough,
This horse will be his mount,
Because you only can get it from your enemy.

"Jagurp Bayi, you should remember clearly,
The colt has some characteristics:
There are full of long hoar lanugo on its buff body,
The lanugo is shallow colored but not molts.

Its size is only as a medium-sized donkey,
Its forelegs are only as the size of a stick used for fluffing wool.
Innocence shows in its eyes,
But fortitude is hidden deep behind it.
It has not physically developed well,
So no one can tell it is a fine steed.

"I will always keep my eyes open,
You also should be seeing about.
Once we find it, we can not lose it."

Six days had passed,
Since Jagurp Bayi went to visit Qingersh.
When he was ready to leave,
He found the hoar colt in Qingersh's horse stable,
Which was mentioned by Berita.
Jagurp considered secretly:
"How can it be a battle steed galloping across the battlefield!"

Qingersh persuaded Jagurp over and over again,
To ask Jagurp to accept the fine steed and brocade robe.
But Jagurp did not hesitate any more:
"The thin horse in your stable,
Will be enough for a child to ride."
What Jagurp asked for was just the hoar colt.

Heard that, Qingersh fleered:
"Do you really want that colt?
If you want to listen,
I will tell you,
The story of this hoar colt:

"In my stable,
There is a black and white mare,
It gives birth to a colt,
Every three years.
It always runs away from here,

To Ayidon lake in Altay.
It copulates and gets pregnant there,
Then comes back to my stable.

"It bore the first colt when it was five,
The colt is black,
And has a perfect body,
Which shows the power of a fine steed.
Nobles came from around and asked for the colt,
It made me annoyed day and night.

"Arokai came everyday,
Stood in my yard and did not leave.
I asked him for sky-high price,
To let him give up the colt.

"Arokai sent me herds of livestock,
Without any hesitation.
All these livestock,
Made my wealth increased so much.
The black colt is invaluable,
Arokai gave me precious things,
For whole two months.

"In the following two years,
The black and white horse had another colt.
Kanchy's son Georoy,
Also sent me countless presents,
He finally became the master of this colt.

"In another three years, it did not give birth.
Then it disappeared for two years,
My enquiry for it everyday made my servants crazy,
I did not stop looking for it.

"In the third year after it disappeared,
Suddenly it came back.
It gave birth to a colt that year,

That is just the hoar colt you are asking for.

"It has already been four years old this year,
But its lanugo has not pulled.
Before this year,
It had no energy to go out with horses,
It only has legs like the fluffing-wool stick①,
Do you really like and want this colt?"

Jagurp said at once:
"I don not have the hero son,
Like Arokai and Georoy,
They can choose fine steeds and give their sons!

"Sirk and Sirak,
They are still too young.
They do not dare ride a horse,
And do not dare go out the yurt to urinate.

"My daughter Kaderhachy,
She is now as pretty as a birch,
But she is as timid as a rabbit,
Especially scared of violent-tempered horse.
This colt is honest and never goes out,
If I send it to my daughter,
She must be very happy."

"Now that you like this colt,
You can take it away,
Please do not bother!"
Qingersh agreed cheerly.
Some servants came in,
And tied the halter for the colt.

Jagurp and Qingersh shook hands,

① The fluffing-wool stick: The thin stick Kirgiz people used to make carpet.

And said "farewell!"
He rode the horse and went immediately.

Junnare stepped in,
Just after Jagurp went away:
"Your Majesty, Qingersh,
Why did Jagurp leave?
You are noble,
You did not show your warm reception to him,
But saw him off?
How mean you are!"

Qingersh glared Junnare angrily with his eyes wide open,
And bit his lip tightly:
"It is my business,
That whether I present livestock and money to Jagurp.
Could Jagurp complain to you,
That I, Qingersh did not meet his requirement?
He only asked for that hoar colt,
With nothing else in his eyes.

"He just left here,
With that hoar colt.
I explained the detailed things of the colt to him,
But he still insisted on his plea."

Hearing this,
Junnare opened his eyes widely and said:
"Oh, Khuda,
What did you say?
How can you present that hoar colt?
It is not a colt but a dragon,
You present it means,
You present your throne to others.
"You only sit in your palace,
And make orders,
You never know what that colt can do.

Do you know that the black colt Arokai took,
Has been famous around Alekara;
Do you know that the gray colt Georoy took,
Has got a good fame in Achibuden.

"You never think the hoar colt will have a good prospect,
So you do not train it.
You do not know the habits of steeds,
You do not listen to the advice either.
You say its forelegs are as thin as stalks of achnatherum,
And always ignore it.

"It will become the divine Ackura steed,
You will never find another steed like this.
Why did you present it to other people?
Your misfortune will descend step by step from now on.

"I come for a special purpose,
But not for asking it.
I observed the hoar colt you presented to Jagurp,
Every three days,
Today is the time for observing.

"Qingersh, what a silly thing you did,
To present the colt easily,
What a pity!"

After Junnare's censure,
Qingersh sent a servant immediately,
To chase the colt back.

Jagurp spurred his steed at top speed,
And looked around at times.
He noticed a steed from the herd village,
Came straightly to his direction.
Jagurp felt nervous and flustered,
He was worried the coming person would ask the colt back.

There was a low hill near in the front,
He sped up his horse hurriedly toward it.

But no matter how he lashed and dragged,
The hoar colt did not move forward even one step.
He had to order his servants,
To climb the hill with his camels first.

That steed stopped at his side this moment.
Jagurp complained angrily,
But he had to unloose the rope and let the colt go.

The man whipped in the hoar colt hard,
But the emaciated colt stood still.
"Damned Qingersh,
Why asked such an inferior horse back?"

The following coming servants of Qingersh,
Whipped heavily on the head of the colt.
Then turned round and went back,
Jagurp sped up to climb the hill.
The hoar colt went after him.

Junnare watched the bone carefully,
And noticed that the colt went with Jagurp.
"I whipped in the colt, but it kept unmoved."
The servants said.
But people did not really care it,
And ignored it gradually.

The hoar colt neighed,
And caught up with Jagurp.
Jagurp led its halter,
To his domain.
"The colt bought by wheat."
This story came down then.

Jagurp Bayi went back Balikun,
Did not delay any time,
Made all his things packed,
Took the letter of attorney along with him,
And moved to Bulunto.

Since he moved to Bulunto,
Jagurp Khan's name enjoyed reputation everywhere.
Nuoyi Khan died suddenly,
Then his subjects left,
Were administered by Jagurp.

Autumn came soon,
It was time for Jagurp to pack up,
And go to Turpan again.
He had already have a hundred camels,
Fifty servants would go with him.

Jagurp was making the preparation,
He asked servants,
To choose fine steeds,
To saddle and bridle the steeds,
Everything should be ready in three days,
Then Jagurp would leave for Turpan.

Jagurp sat face to face with Qierdy,
Talked with her the things he saw and heard:
"Your brother Berita,
Mentioned the hoar colt many times;
Qingersh presented it to me generously first,
Then sent servant to ask it back.

"The hoar colt came and followed me,
Finally I pulled it back our home.
From its appearance and expression,
We cannot see any great character.
I thought Berita was always wise,

Why he takes a fancy to such a colt?"

Heard this, Qierdy said slowly:
"Jagurp, please listen carefully!
Since the hoar colt came,
My breast is swollen and latex is flowing.

"I was trying to tell you this many times,
But I do not know what you are thinking of,
If you agree,
I want to feed the hoar colt,
With my milk and wheat.

"Maybe it is a magical colt,
Which was born only for your son.
You bought the name of Khan for yourself,
By your treasure.

"You exchanged the hoar colt from Qingersh,
With your forty camels' wheat.
Actually, it is not you, but Manas,
Who ploughed and got the wheat harvest.
It is just this hoar colt,
The magical Ackura that Berita mentioned."

Jagurp laughed heartily after hearing this:
"Qierdy, my dear wife,
You said your breast is swollen for a colt,
How can it be true?
You should milk it now,
Let me see."

As Jagurp finished his words,
A strong stream of milk,
Flew out from Qierdy's breast,
And filled up a big bowl.
The milk came because of the hoar colt,

It should be used to feed the colt.

Qierdy said to Jagurp:
"There is still some milk left in my breast,
Is there someone else,
Who will share my milk with your son?"

Jagurp became silent,
Qierdy held a double handful of wheat,
Put them in the milk and stirred,
Then gave the milk to the hoar colt.
The colt parted its lips and ate greedily,
As it was familiar with the smell of the milk.

"Ackura and Manas are fed by the same mother!"
This legend came in this way.
Magical steed Ackura,
Belonged to Qingersh at first.

All the things had packed up,
Jagurp Bayi was ready,
To leave for Turpan tomorrow.
It took ten days,
From Balikun to Turpan.
But it took whole forty days,
From Altay to Bulunto.

Jagurp took a hundred camels,
And quite a few servants,
And arrived in Turpan.

Karanuoyi's wife,
Had boiled too many kettles' milky tea.

"Jagurp Bayi will come this year."
Karanuoyi said to himself all the time,
And he had made good preparation for moving.

A one-year-old camel,
Was carried by Manas to slaying ground,
Guests were treated with the camel meat.
Manas and Majik beat up and down,
And played around.

Till the guests came early slept sound,
The guests came late went into the tents,
Karanuoyi and Jagurp Bayi,
Began to discuss the issue of moving:
"If we have a hundred-camel goods,
We can exchange for pure gold."

Manas and Majik,
Were hiding in the dark and listening in.
After discussing,
They got an idea.

Two years ago,
Jagurp Bayi brought the maroon colt here,
It had grown to Totoru steed,
Majik's beloved horse.

Manas said to Majik:
"Majik, listen carefully,
If you are willing to follow me,
We'd better escape from here.

"My father is very mean,
He is moved at the sight of money,
He will not let us do as our pleasure,
A tied eagle could not triumph in the sky.

"My father always treats others with indifference,
He will never observe our difficulties,
We should act when he sleeps soundly.

"The maroon colt is not an ordinary one,
It is four this year, and will be five next year,
It looks really larruping.
Even if you do not feed it for three months,
It still can let you ride to everywhere,
Without exposing any demerits.

"I will ride my father's steed,
All other horses he brought here are no good.
They have too much fat in their bodies,
They go too slowly,
I do not want to carry them to walk in the hot desert.

"We have already heard their talking,
And deeply remembered the routes.
I should go and remit to my mother,
Then we act together.

"We should listen to her edification,
And also should consult Berita,
Then fulfill our plan.
We should do right now,
Rather than carrying wheat with camels."

They discussed on the plan over and over again,
They prepared the food for their trip.
They rushed out the herd village after the good preparation.

There was a zigzag mountain path,
Between Altay and Balikun.
They climbed over the Salebald hill,
And the village of Jagurp,
Was just in front of them.

The stars shone in the dark sky like pearls,
The villagers were in sound sleep,
But the shepherd dogs were woken up.

They barked crazily,
The two youths went shoulder by shoulder,
And stopped in front of Jagurp's yurt.

Qierdy had presage these days:
"Jagurp had gone to Turpan,
So my son would possibly come back with him.
I nurtured him with my latex,
He must repay me an obligation.
No matter during the day or at night,
Once he comes he will show himself in front of me."

Heard the hurried barks of dogs,
Qierdy went out of the yurt quickly,
She saw two figures of men on the horses,
Went toward her yurt.

Qierdy felt very exited,
She run forward,
Her son Manas,
Was standing in front of her right now.

She also heard something about the youth,
Beside Manas.
"He must be the young hero Majik."
She went a step forward and kissed Manas on his cheeks.
She hugged her son tightly,
And kissed his neck.
Qierdy could not control her exiting feeling,
Her face was covered with tears.

Bakdolet stepped out the yurt at the moment,
Her dress floated with wind.
She walked by Manas' side agitato,
Held him in her arms.

Qierdy woke up,

All the family members.
Asked servant butcher the white goat with yellow forehead,
Held the blessing ceremony.

She asked Manas to take off his clothes,
And presented to the poor.
She took her son to the yurt,
And let him sleep.
But Qierdy was too exited,
She spent a sleepless night.

She asked to butcher another white goat with yellow forehead,
To do a lustrum,
To ensure the health of his son.
She also asked servants to butcher mares,
And treat all the guests and neighbours.

Manas rested for two days,
Then Qierdy took him to the horse stable,
Let him look at and observe,
The hoar colt carefully.

Heard the voice the hero,
The hoar colt neighed.
Manas observed carefully,
He found its legs were thin.

"When it came to our home,
My breast was swollen,
I fed it with my milk and wheat.
It swobbled,
As it was familiar with the smell of my milk.

"Your father brought it here from far away,
Your uncle Berita said,
It is the magical steed Khuda presented to you."

Manas dauted the hoar colt gently,
From its head to its bottom.
The lanugo never came off,
Dropped off suddenly with none left,
Its body shone like the silk.

When Manas drew his hand back,
The hoar colt felt exited,
With its hooves digging and its ears standing,
There are sign of propitious omens showing on its forehead.

Observing its waist and bottom carefully,
There were marks alternating with dark colour and tint.
Those were marks left after sage Kanbar① touched it,
We must remember this clearly.

The firm teeth of the hoar colt grew out immediately,
Like steel columns.
Its belly constricted tightly, and ears stood straightly.

It stayed in the stable for half a month,
Its eyes flashed like lightening.
The magical steed,
Was waiting for its master.

Its long mane and tail shone as string,
Its straight bridge of nose,
Made it more charming.
Its shapely figure had no demerits,
Like the portrait on the wall.

Hero was surprised with the colt,
He held the halter immediately.
"Where is my uncle Berita now?"
He was too impatient to wait for asking.

① Kanbar: He was the sage raising and training horse in Kirgiz legend, he was also the patron saint of horses.

Hearing the inquiry of her son,
Qierdy told Manas the truth:
"Your uncle Berita,
He lives in deep Akcharbura,
It is near the mouth of Akaritash mountain,
Its approximate location,
Is near the bank of Alari lake.

"He is eager to see you,
He is waiting for you day and night.
You should listen to me carefully,
And remember all what I said.

"Your father is short-sighted and has no ambition at all,
You can never be annoyed about him.
Whenever servants butcher his livestock,
His heart aches a lot.
He also does not let you live as a prince,
And live comfortably.

"You'd better go and discuss with your uncle Berita,
Rather than stay here wasting time.

"In the past time,
Kirgiz people were destroyed by Karamark people.
They are our enemies,
They did all the bad things,
To prevent your coming to this world.
They cut pregnant women's belly open,
And killed their unborn babies.
Let those women bled to death.

"We were forced to leave our hometown,
And became Karamark's slaves and servants.
The surroundings of the place your uncle lives,
Is occupied by Karamark people.
He only has a small place to live.

"Do not go there during the day time,
You'd better go at dusk,
Then you can get there at night.

"There are three yurts on the highland,
One is the kitchen, one is the living room,
And another one is his bedroom.
Without his permission,
No one dare to approach his yurts.

"This is the character of his yurts, my son,
I will tell you the characters of his livestock,
You should remember these clearly.

"Like the stones in Akala valley,
Like the spring in Sarala,
Like the grey cliff.
His horses are countless,
But no one is in charge of them.

"Your uncle's horses,
Are very easy to distinguish.
Other people also have horses,
But they only have haploid breed.
The horses like your uncle's,
Are too hard to find in the world.

"He never ties the hinny in front of his yurt,
He seldom has close contact with his villagers,
So people are always at respectful distance with him.
He never raises shepherd,
But no one can enter his yurt,
Without his invitation.

"You will be found if you go during the day time,
Karamark people always swaggered before others,
They will come and nag at you.

You should be careful,
And do not let me worry about you."

As she finished her words,
She began to cry,
For her son's leaving,
Manas was only a small boy at the moment,
But he had too much things in his heart.

Manas rode on the hoar colt,
And consoled his mother;
He urged Majik to take the journey,
They left the herd village and sped forward.

After they left,
Qierdy and Bakdolet,
Looked at the sight of their back,
Teared in the far.

They saw Markdume's yurt on their way,
She was fearless,
She was sapiential,
She thought over carefully.

"She is also my father's wife,
She is the same as my mother.
If I do not visit her this time,
I am not sure when I can see her next time?
She will rebuke me for not visiting her."

Manas turned his horse head to the byroad,
The powerful Majik went with him,
They arrived at Markdume's yurt soon.
Markdume was just in front of her yurt:
She did not let the boys dismount from their horses,
She kissed the boys on the horses,
With agitated tears in her eyes.

Her son's name was Sirk,
The other's name was Sirak,
They were twins,
And just seven years old.

Their eyes flashed like lightening,
Their face looked like the iron.
They were ready to go into battle,
With full of their energy.

"I have brothers who can fight with me shoulder by shoulder!"
Manas lowered his head,
Held Sirak in his arms.

They lived there at night,
They were happy for receiving the warm treat.
The twin's mother was also very happy.

Servants were busy,
To butcher calf less than one year old,
To butcher two-year-old colt,
Let the boys eat.

The following morning,
Manas made his farewell to them,
He rode on the back of Ackula,
Set out for Altay with Majik.

They arrived at a place called Chambrita,
After several days trip.
They did not ask the way from anybody,
His mother Qierdy's words,
Was always in his heart clearly.

There were a big herd of horses on the prairie,
They recognized that was his uncle's herd immediately.
They spent a whole day to cross the herd of horses.

Sixty breeds of horses all could be found there,
But they were easy to distinguish.

They climbed on a hill,
Looked back to the herd village.
All what Qierdy was saying were true,
Berita's village was just in the front.

There was a valley with swift current in the middle,
And vast land was on both sides,
It was a place suitable for living.
They saw three yurts beside the hill,
That was the place where Berita was living.

They sat on the hill quietly and observed,
There were full of the yurts on the other side of the hill,
People were busy with all the things.
But in front of those three yurts,
No one was showing around.

At the back of the yurt,
On the hillside,
A man was sitting there.
He was with great figure,
Any timid person,
Who saw the man suddenly,
Would scare to death.

Herds men came and went,
In a great bustle.
Nine horses carrying the milk shuttled back and forth,
One of the yurts was very noisy.

Herd men poured the milk into leather bags,
They came in and went out the yurt,
In a hurry,
It made others confused about that.

Till the evening came,
The colt was untied,
Mare was released.
Forty horses,
Carried the milk,
And let it store in the village on the other side.
The boys saw all the things clearly,
And remembered.

At dusk,
At the place where the giant sat,
The boys appeared suddenly.

Onuzdo's son, giant Berita,
Had a very big figure.
He was very wise,
And could foresee with divine accuracy.
"If that is really Manas,
He should be here at this time."

He counted it on his fingers,
And knew that the boy was just nine years old.
"Within two days,
He must come here.

"If they are not wary,
Come here during the day time,
They will be found by Karamark people."
So he sat on the hillside to watch.

"I wait from morning till the night,
Why have they not appeared yet?
Could I have forgotten the time,
Or I counted it wrong?"
The boys did not come,
Berita went back to his yurt in trembling.

Akberita went into his room,
He was thinking,
And moving toward the chair slowly,
Suddenly he heard the sound,
As a string of clop came closer,

Akberita rushed out the yurt,
His wife complained:
"You are famous giant Berita,
You are not a kid now.

"You sat outside for the whole day,
Without eating,
Without drinking,
Till the night comes,
Why are you so crazy today?"

"You, such a short-sighted woman!"
Berita gazed at his wife angrily,
Then he turned round silently,
And went out his yurt hurriedly.

At the moment,
The boys came on the ride like wind,
They tied their horses on the wooden pole,
And then extended greetings to Berita.

Akberita opened and closed his mouth,
Without saying anything.
He did not look around,
But went straight to the boys' steeds.

He walked around Arckura,
Observed carefully.
He was looking forward to the day,
When he could observe the steed.

"Are there any marks,
Left by the touch of sage Kanbar?"
He watched the steed's bottom carefully.
The clear marks of fingers,
Were like the lines drew by crayon.
He untied the halter of the steed,
And led it to the bottom of the valley.

Down the deep valley,
There was a cliff,
Under it was a big cave.
That was a man-made cave,
Berita had lived in it for three years,
He kept his secret here.

Berita was very cautious,
Because Karamark prophet,
Yelinga, who could tell the future,
Lived in the same village with him.

"So long as he did not see the magical steed,
Everything will be fine,
Once he finds any clue,
He will be doubtful of us and make us in trouble."

Akberita had made good preparation,
He hid the steed in the cave.
Akberita arranged all these well,
Then he led two boys to his yurt.
Majik stepped forward quickly and raised the door curtain,
Akberita guided the way in the front,
And led Manas in his yurt.

Looked at Manas carefully,
Giant Akberita's wife,
Was scared of what she saw,
She was nearly passed out.

"Berita always mentions about them,
I only heard about them without seeing,
Is this youth,
Our nephew Manas?"
She was asking herself but still confused,
So she told herself,
To cook for them.

They had mare's milk stirred with honey,
Ghee filled in the gourd,
Fried dough cakes cooked with cheese,
And cooked horse guts and horse stomach.

She cut all these food into small pieces,
Put them on the table.
She went in front of Chigerd①,
And was ready to lift the curtain.

Akberita gave her a gentle hint,
Saying some confusing words,
His guests did not know it at all.
He shook his head at his wife,
Gave her the tip to not take out the food in it.

His wife took his meaning,
Spread the big table cloth ready on the table.
She took out the milky tea,
Raised beverage Jarma②,
And a few Nan.

After finished all these food,
Two boys were still very hungry,
But they had to go to sleep.

① Chigerd: A lattice covering with an achnatherum curtain used for keeping food on the right in a yurt.

② Jarma: Kirgiz traditional beverage made of raised wheat flour which is cooked thoroughly.

"Is there any miracle tonight?"
Berita was sleepless.
Till the latter half of the night,
Manas stretched his arms,
And snored like thunder.

Suddenly, a light beam,
Radiated inside of the yurt.
The yurt was lit up by the light beam,
Like the goddess came down from heaven,
And made the yurt bright.

Akberita was too exited with seeing this,
He got up,
And run out of the yurt,
He prayed with holding his collar tightly.

He would appreciate the demiurge Jarit,
For giving seventy sheep as a sacrifice:
"Tomorrow morning,
I will divide the mutton to the poor."

He made himself calmed down,
Then went back his yurt quietly,
Without telling his wife,
He buried all the things he saw in his heart.

The eastern sky was turning fish-belly grey,
Servants opened the cover on the skylight.
Berita blamed them severely,
And the servants went back to their yurt.

Berita, himself,
Came to the cave in the valley.
There were plenty forage grass,
The two steeds were standing,
And chewing there quietly,

With their mane whipping from time to time.

Berita locked the cave,
He acted secretly,
No one knew what he was doing,
Including his wife.

He went back and stood in front of the yurt,
Called out the herdsmen,
Hearing the calling,
The herdsmen gathered together in a second with fear.

"Tiliak, what I am saying now,
You must remember clearly.
Do not go back to your yurt,
Just set off with your steed right now.

"Tiliak,
I have countless horses on the prairie,
You are the head of the herdsmen,
You know my horses to your fingertips.

"Do not choose colt and old horse,
I do not quite trust them,
You'd better choose five or seven years old strong horses,
At least they should be three years old.

"Be sure they have simple one color,
To look for the violet blue mares,
Choose seven of them,
And lead them here before milking.

"The mares began to produce milk as the fall comes,
I did not say anything.
Villagers are complaining,
About no my invitation this year,

They are expecting for Wulusi① mare's milk festival.
Now my mares are strong enough,
I will let each villager be happy."

With Berita's order,
Tiliak acted right now.
He gathered all the sixty herdsmen,
In front of Berita's yurt.

They were looking for the horses carefully in herds of horses,
They found one seven-year-old mare,
Two five-year-old mares,
And four three-year-old mares.

According to Berita's order,
Seven mares were collected,
Seven herdsmen were chosen,
To ride these mares.
Their head Tiliak,
Ordered them as Berita ordered him.

Let's see what Berita would do:
He left the seven-year-old mare,
And the two five-year-old mares,
And led them into his stable.

"Now, lead these four mares,
To Ayinla,
Divide the mares to four households,
And ask them to get ready for welcome guests.

"You all should be quick with your hands and feet,
Do not dawdle till the evening.
All the skylights are covered,
You should open all of them."

① Wulusi: It is Kirgiz traditional custom, in fall, when mares produce plenty of milk, each household invite others to drink mare's milk for celebration.

"Tiliak,
There are seven leather bags of mare milk in your yurt,
You should pour into the bowel,
For guests all the time.

" 'Kirgiz people are generous.'
We should let Karamark people praise,
And let it descend as a popular saying.
Let people enjoy themselves there,
And have no time to come to my yurt."

Six tall and sturdy servants,
Were in charge of cooking;
They reacted readily,
Among Akberita's three yurts.
Berita warned again and again,
Without having a rest:
"Butcher the seven-year-old mare according the rule,
And do not put its hooves into the cauldron.

"Washed the guts clean,
The fire should be in medium heat.
Do not make a feint of tasting,
But eat meat in the cauldron,
Skim the foam from time to time,
And do not forget to put salt in it."

Berita was still in suspense,
So he warned his wife:
"You must be in charge of this by yourself……"
And repeated his words.

But he was still there,
And monitored them to work.
The mare meat had boiled thoroughly on time,
Filled in several big wooden basins.
Those six servants acted together,

To separate the bones and the meat,
Then cut the meat into slices.

He asked the servants to help the boys washing hands,
Then put the chops in front of them.
"How much meat on earth they can eat?"
Akberita tested their appetite.

Manas held the chop one by one,
Tore the meat from it,
And put the meat into his mouth quickly.
Majik was also busy,
With eating the meat.

Manas and Majik,
Ate all the chops in a moment,
Servants began to serve them the meat slices:
Basin after basin,
The servants were all busy to death.

For today's meet,
Akberita had prepared for three years.
He let servants make three oxen's leather tanned,
And then smoked them with branches of pine tree.

Three oxen leather had been tanned well,
As smooth as the silk.
Then sewed into leather bags,
With catgut thin as the silk.

The leather bags were filled up with mare's milk,
And stirred with Bishkek① stick,
Till the milk was done,
Then put the leather bags on the left of the yurt.

Akberita raised his head,

① Bishkek: Kirgiz language, it is a stick used to stir the mare's milk in leather bags to make mare milk wine.

Looked at the boys with contentment:
"There is a leather bag of mare's milk,
Dear children,
Please drink it!"

Giant Akberita's wooden bowl was huge,
It could hold a six-year-old child in it,
The child could not climb out of the bowl,
If no one helped him.

Manas drank thirty bowls of milk in a breath,
But Majik could only drink nine bowls,
Manas raised the leather bag and drank all the milk.
There was no one drop left in the leather bag,
Manas moistened his lips with the tongue,
The big and full leather bag,
Shrank into a small ball.

The young hero was like an eagle,
Akberita liked him very much.
He told himself:
"The boys are coming from far away,
If they sleep now,
It will be hard to digest the mare meat they have eaten,
It is harmful to their health.
I should chat with them,
And know some of their thinking."

Akberita opened his mouth:
"You are of the same age,
Come to my yurt with hard journey,
I had to let you sleep for it was too late last night,
Now I can ask you about your thinking.

"Please tell me,
Who are your fathers?
Do not come quietly and go either,

Please tell me the truth.

"I should ask again, what are your names,
Who are your clansmen? Who are your mothers?
Boys, you'd better tell me all these.
And who are your uncles?
Do not hide anything from me.

"You slept on your empty stomach last night,
Do not put that thing in your heart.
Please tell me,
The details of all the things."

Faced with Akberita's inquiry,
Manas answered clearly and eloquently:
"Our hometown is in the forest of Altay,
Kirgiz Khan Nuoyi was our ancestor.

"My father is Jagurp Bayi,
My uncle is giant Berita.
I come to look for my uncle,
But it seems he does not care me.

"My mother is Qierdy,
My name is 'Chanjindy',
I heard it has some meaning in it.
My mother asked me to come to my uncle for help,
I ride on the horse day and night.

"Among Kirgiz,
There is a tribe called Oyson.
There is an old called Karanuoyi,
This is his son Majik."

Hearing Manas' answers,
Akberita was wild with joy.
He sighed with emotion for his nephew's eloquence.

"I heard Jagurp has gone to Turpan,
My dear nephew, is he still there now?
Whether the hoar colt outside the door,
Was exchanged by the wheat,
You planted by yourself?

"I am Berita,
I have prepared your coat armor well for you.
All the things we are talking now,
You should keep them deep in your heart,
Do not mention with anyone else."

Too many things happened from the time of Nuoyi,
Akberita explained carefully,
Let Manas know the details of all these.

Akberita continued his talking:
"Kirgiz has been in its good time,
The willings for a long time will come true soon.
Karamark wise men,
Forecasted your coming to this world,
To descend misfortune on them.

"You boys can rest here today and tomorrow,
You should set off the day after tomorrow.
Do not let Jagurp tail after you to here,
To stir up a conflict."

If Jagurp turned up here,
He would be a backseat driver:
"Come on, go back home.
The immature eagle cannot leave its nest,
I am looking around for you,
Why you come and hide here?
My child,
People can throw any word on you."

Till the evening came,
They came into the cave,
Lit all the candles and oil lamps,
Made the cave as bright as the daylight.

He took out the saddle he had prepared,
Which made the golden light shone in the cave.
Berita spent a huge sum of money,
And invited famous craftsman to make it.

The saddle was made of gold,
With carvings on it.
The silk knitted bridle,
Was harnessed on the horse head tightly.

The bridle was weaved,
By a hundred and five strings of deer leather.
The frontal bristle was cut short,
And decorations on it was costly.
There was decoration on the tip of the nutant tassel,
Which was no scrap iron in it,
But only pure gold and silver.

The harness was finely made,
Shone under the sun.
All the parts were beset with gold,
Except the snaffle.

The gems were beset at five parts,
It was a perfect harness,
You could not tell any flaw of it.
The saddle on the horse back,
Was unique and exquisite without compare.

For the cause of hero Manas,
Berita made the preparation for him for quite some time.

Decorated the top of the saddle with pure gold,
Beset the wings of the saddle with pure silver.
Fastened both sides of the saddle with pig iron,
Made the bottom of the stirrup with pig iron.
Decorated all other parts with pure gold,
Berita made a fine skilled Kirgiz saddle.

The pure silver made girth,
Was beset by gold.
On the girth,
Pure gold decorating rings were hanging,
Without any scrap iron in it.

The leatherstrap which was weaved by seventy leather strings,
Was also decorated with gold.
The shining gold threads,
Were weaved with leather strings together.
They put the mattress on the saddle,
And made it soft and comfortable.

Akberita said:
"Hey, my nephew Manas,
The lanneret will fly up to the sky sooner or later,
You will make a long and hard journey,
Let my son Chuwak accompany you.

"My son Chuwak,
Must be your bosom friend.
I want him to go with you today,
But he still should wait for another two years.

"He is seven years old now,
He needs more time to grow.
I know his personality,
He is open and forthright,
But he is also imprudent and rash.

"You will be on your journey from now on,
You must be cautious all the time.
You should go straight toward west,
Then pulled the halter to south a little,
Your destination will be Samarhan.

"On the north of Samarhan,
There was a place called Belsaz,
Where Garmgirchy and Shihay live,
Karamark people always invade.
Your people live there,
You cannot take reckless actions,
Please remember all my words.

"If you rose in rebellion in Altay,
Karamark people will not let us be happy.
Do not attach any extravagant hope to their surrender,
They will level our place to the ground.

"You are brave and you can protect yourself,
I also can survive narrowly.
But the great majority of Kirgiz people,
Will be separated with their wives and children and live a miserable life.

"Think carefully,
We will be in hot water.
We have to leave our own land,
To fight to the end,
With hateful enemies.

"Set out from one place,
Regain our lost land gradually.
I should prepare well this year,
Select all the male livestock,
And make all them castrated.

"Let all Kirgiz people,

Be at our beck and call.
Let the elders go to Karamarks' to plead them,
And others displace secretly.
I will also move toward Samurhan,
Without Karamark's notice."

"Two years ago,
I have heard there was a battle gown in Budayk Khan's hand,
Which could not shoot through by the arrow,
I will send my son Chuwak to ask for it.

"Kapchaque's son Abdeld,
Is with the similar age of Chuwak.
I saw him when he was five years old,
He was already a lusty boy.

"I have heard many times,
That Bakay is a sage,
All his words have now come true,
His prophecy will save others' lives.
I heard that he is waiting for you anxiously,
To meet you early and discuss the great event.

"The well-informed long-eared elder,
Comes out with such words:
The lance you will use in the future,
Will be presented by Bakay.
Ayikoge will come to welcome you,
And then serve you forever.

"You will get the magic sword Achirlbaris,
Who dare to be your enemy and fight with you?
The lame artisan Bolicbye,
Has the amazing skills.

"You are mainly equipped,
With the battle-axe and the lance,

Except Bolicbye,
No artisan can forge such weapons.

"I heard from others' talking,
And also found from observing the scapula,
In order to keep abreast of your new information,
And remember all these in my heart,
I read the scripture Asturap every three days,
To get and master all the things.

"Your uncle Shihay,
Is also a mean man,
He has the same father with your father,
But he knows nothing about you.

"Garmgirchy is my brother,
You must look for him.
You should discuss with him seriously,
He will show you how to get onto the right path."

Akberita said all what were on his mind,
Without reservation.
He went back to sleep,
After their talking.

Two days' time passed quickly,
The departing morning came.
Akberita climbed on the top of opposite mountain,
Observed the route carefully,
For Manas.

Early people rose with the sun,
Late people were still in the bed.
When the sun rose,
The bright and brave boys,
Spurred their steeds,
Left the herd village.

They went round an earth hummock,
They saw Akberita standing in front of them.
They held the halter and jumped down the steed,
Greeted Akberita cap in hevnd.

Akberita shook hands warmly with Manas,
And said meaningfully:
"You are my nephew,
I take you as my son,
You must know the miserable life of Kirgiz people,
For your seven-generation ancestors.

"Since you have made soaring aspiration,
You should advance bravely.
Once you march forward,
You will arrive at Samarhan.

"There is a herd village on your way,
It never suffers ravage,
Your uncle lives there,
Karamark people do not dare invade him.
You should visit him and show your respect,
To your uncle Giant Koshaoyi.

"If you keep going southwardly,
You'd better go along the side of Arat mountain,
Be sure not to go on the plain under the mountain.
There are thickly dotted Karamark people,
You cannot entangle with them.

"Do not scare the high mountain,
'Mountain is father and water is mother.'
This is the belief of Kirgiz people.

"In Atbarsh,
There is a sacred cemetery place called Chechdob.
A great hero Koshaoyi lives there,

He never bends his knees to Karamark.

"If you do not go to visit him,
He must be very sad.
If you meet him when you are grown up,
He will be discontented with you.
"You should let him feel:
'The hero come and visit me specially',
He will give you advice and suggestion.
If you march upon Aranik,
He must direct troops and horses to help you.

"You visit him,
At your naive young age,
He must remember it forever,
He will think highly of family love,
And support you and sing your praise.

"Your father Jagurp,
He is also a brother of Katarhan.
They are brothers with same father,
They are equal.
If you do not visit him this time,
He will be regretful all his life.

"The dad-burned enemies,
Will fleer behind your back.
How can you oppose your enemies' power,
How can you get close to your family members?
If you do not make good preparation in advance,
You will be confused about your enemy and friend.

"No matter in the future, or now,
You should make inquiries with an open mind.
You should let them in the bottom of their hearts,
Feel your sincerity.
At a proper time,

You should go to their yurts by yourself,
To deepen the affection with each other.

"When it is necessary,
You should look down upon everything,
Take no notice of others,
Do not lower your dignity,
For the people you think they are good,
To cater to their pleasure.
The hero should await the proper moment,
Maintain the right balance of everything.

"I have to remind you again,
That go to Koshaoyi's village by yourself.
You can go assured,
Do not bother by other things.

"In Yilibing meadow,
On the west of Yili,
In Kansiber basin,
Beside Kechyx river bank,
Kazakh Ayidarhan's herd village is there.

"For a long time,
They suffer devastation from Karamark.
You should go and visit him,
Do not tell him your name Manas,
Tell him the name Chanjindy is enough.

"I only heard but did not see,
That Ayidarhan has a son, Kokcher,
He is strong but quick in movement,
He is a real heat guy.

"A horse walking alone can not stir up the dust,
There is no Kazakh cooperate with him,

So he is still unfamous.
You can make friends with him,
And be closer with him if it is necessary for you.
But if he is an shallow base person,
You just come back and do not need to rap to him."

Akberita told them in details,
All the things he knew.
He kissed the youth on the hand:
"Go ahead! My boys!"
The prairie resounded with their farewell.

The young heroes said goodbye to Akberita,
Marched forward along Basalik mountain.

Young Hero's Modest Display

Dark clouds were gathering in the sky over Altay,
It was drizzling everyday.
Manas arrived in Yili valley,
Walked on the slope of Kansiber mountain.

He kept a lookout from the slope,
A stretch of flat prairie was in front of his eyes.
Sheep were fattening up here in summer,
Layers of dejecta were on the prairie.

Ayidarhan's son Kokcher,
Was playing the game "Take Palace" with his partners.
There were thirty partners with him,
They were all in impressive way.

Ayidarhan's son Kokcher,
Was around twenty years old.
He separated his partners into two groups,
To play the game "Take Palace",
He trained all these boys deft and sharp-witted.

Manas, son of Jagurp,
Never played "Take Palace",
He took off his gown and played with those boys.
He soon forgot his journey.

Manas and Kokcher were the leaders,
For those thirty two warriors.

Sixteen boys as a group,
Each of them led one group.
Each one from the losing group,
Should present a girl to the winner as a gift.

Knocked the dibs with ox horn,
If one group broke the rule,
The other group would dispute.
They were angry and fierce,
And seemed to fight for the result.
They laughed at each other,
But they played together happily soon.

They were playing in high spirits,
A group of camels was appeared suddenly,
It moved toward the slope of the mountain.

Listen carefully about this group of camels,
There were more than three hundred dromedaries,
Connecting together one after one.
A rich man Duohan,
Who lived in Aranick,
Cornered large amount of black tea,
Which was bought from Ketay especially.

The man who was in charge of the group of camels,
Was called Dudar.
Kozkamen's son Kokcherkz,
Was also the leader of the camel group.

He led Arokai's camels,
Walked in the camel group.
Duohan and Arokai,
Gathered a hundred and fifty camels by each,
Did the business together.

They led the camels and walked slowly,
The group of camels winded like a meandering dragon,
With the sound of camel bells.

Duohan's camels——
Were led by a black male camel called Karalok.
In all camels,
Duohan loved this camel only.

Duohan's camels cleared the way in the front,
He was with his nose in the air,
And led his camels intrude into the "Palace".

Manas was playing happily right now,
He was knocking the dibs in the circle.
They were concentrating their energy on the game,
Put every other thing out of the consideration.
The boys were noisy with playing game,
Without paying any attention to the coming Karamark people.

These Karamark people,
Led their camels,
Cross the "Palace" as bold as brass,
The boys were forced to stop their game.

Manas was knocking down a dibs.
He was so powerful,
That the dibs flew away like an arrow.
A foreleg and a rear leg of the black male camel,
Was hit by the dibs.
As both legs were broken,
The black camel toppled down to the ground.

The Karamark people was boiling with rage,
He hit hard at a boy beside him,
Directly to the boy's head and face.
Blood run out from the boy's nostril.

The boy fell down at once.

Kokcher could not bear by seeing this,
He pounced upon the Karamark people in a great rage.
Ayidarhan's son Kokcher,
Was outstanding and impressive,
He dashed ahead regardless of his safety,
Aimed at the Karamark who hit that boy,
Cut his head off in an instant.
It was desperately serious,
That a disaster would begin.

Jagurp's son Manas,
Was playing the game wholeheartedly,
He was focusing on knocking the dibs,
He paid no attention,
To the things happening beside him.

Kokcherkz, Kozkamen's son,
Looked alike the Russian people,
With red nose and dark blue eyes.
He licked his thick lips,
Shouted at them aggressively.
He rushed in front of Kokcher,
Tore at Kokcher's collar,
Manas began to notice it.

Manas rushed out of the "Palace",
And asked the thing happened at the moment,
He had no understanding,
Of Ayidarhan's son Kokcher.
Then he fixed his eyes,
On Kozkamen's son Kokcherkz,
And whipped Kokcherkz with a lash.

Before Kokcherkz turned himself over,
Manas had run away like a wind,

He had no time to shake his fist,
So he kicked out mercilessly.
Kokcherkz was kicked down by Manas,
And rolled down from the slope,
Like a big heavy barrel.

Numerous Karamark people,
Including Giant Dudar;
Totally more than two hundred,
They dropped their halters,
And threw themselves forward with loud screaming,
Like a pack of rabid dogs.

As soon as they got close,
Kokcher had killed more than ninety people.
The rest Karamark people,
Were all knocked down by Manas.

As seeing this,
Dudar asked in a panic:
"You two boys, could you tell me who you are please?
What is happening here right now?"

Before Kokcher opened his mouth,
A Karamark people who was lying on the earth,
Told Dudar,
The conflicts between them,
With his raucous voice.

Heard the reason,
Some Karamark people got up from the ground:
"He is the ringleader!"
They shouted and rushed in front of Manas.

Dudar made impertinent remarks,
And bursted into a storm of abuse toward Manas.
Kokcher was an interpreter,

There was no language he could not understand,
In all oriental nations.

"Why do you use such bad words to insult?"
Kokcher raised up the leather halter,
Whipped cruelly,
Toward Dudar's pit of stomach.

Dudar dodged Kokcher's halter,
Then raised strong Kokcher,
High up over his head,
Threw Kokcher at the lawn,
Like throwing a dove.

Manas was unable to bear it any further,
Great fury burned into his breast.
He had no feeling of fear,
He held Dudar's collar in a tight grip,
Which made Dudar hard to breathe.

Dudar kicked his legs in the air,
But with no usage.
Manas seized up his throat,
Blood flew out from his nostril,
He passed out in a moment.

When Manas turned his head ,
He found all Karamark people had got up.
They acted together,
Attacked brutally,
Toward the thirty boys led by Kokcher.
They waved the big sticks,
At the boys' heads,
A sheet of heartrending cries uttered.

Karanuoyi's son Majik,
Was a strong and powerful youth.

He charged Karamark's camels,
And bound fifteen of them with a long rope.

Kokcherkz looked around with his eyes open,
Manas rushed regardless of the danger,
Like the autumn wind sweeping the dead leaves.
The lives of more than fifty Karamark people,
Were ended in his hand in the twinkling of an eye.

Kokcherkz was finally convinced,
Of the extraordinary braveness,
Of Kokcher and Manas.

Such things were not seen,
Even not heard for many years.
"Kirgiz and Kazakh,
Are so powerful and brave now.
If I still stay here,
My life will be gone."

He did not plan to return to Kangayi,
But chose to flee to Nalun.
He intended reporting to Arokai,
What happened here.

Ayidarhan's son Kokcher,
Got up from the lawn bravely,
Waved his fists and fought courageously,
Made himself a good fame of warrior.

Manas and Kokcher,
Fought with Karamark severely,
Except Dudar and Kokcherkz fled away,
Other two hundred and more people,
Were all killed by them.

Dudar was a brave man,

He was also strong and vigorous.
He was regardless of danger of death,
Without giving any impression of weakness to his strong opponents.

Faced with his dead companions,
He said to these two boys:
"You are just two children,
But you kill so many people easily.
How do you settle with this situation?
As long as I, Dudar, am still alive,
Where can you escape to?"

Jagurp's son Manas,
Had no fear of Dudar's threatening words:
"You dare to be called warrior or giant,
Listen carefully, you, the egomania,
It is me, Chanjindy, who killed all your companions."

Heard the name Chanjindy, Dudar talked wildly:
"I will tie your hands tightly,
Send you to Aranick Khan.
If you importune to show off your ability,
I have to carry your head to see Aranick Khan.
I will not be hero Dudar,
If I can not meet my promise."

He strode his huge body forward,
With the shaking of the earth.
He came in front of Manas,
Like a big storm.

Manas could not bear his crazy opponent any more.
He failed to control his anger,
So he held Dudar's lapel tight.

He tied Dudar tightly,
With a long rope,

And dragged Dudar to the top of the mountain,
With his sword fell, blood splashed,
Dudar's head fell into the deep valley.

The boys were in their growing age,
They were not as strong,
As those Karamark people,
But they defeated their opponents,
By their courage.

"Come and assemble!"
Manas called all the boys together:
"Come over, my friend Kokcher,
Please listen to me carefully.

"The Karamark people led by Dudar,
Have already been all killed by us.
We must keep this secret,
Do not let it give away.

"If the news takes vent,
Karamark people will come like flood,
Kazakh and Kirgiz,
Will suffer crushing despair.

"We can not stay here long.
My dear friend Kokcher!
I am planning to go to Samurhan.
Please accept my advice:
Take all these camels and goods,
And those homeless and wandering people,
Together with your thirty companions,
To Buhara.

"I heard from the hearsay,
There are a lot Kirgiz live peacefully in Buhara.
You can present camels to them,

Then choose beautiful girls to marry.

"Arokai and Duohan will only hang around in the east,
When they can not find the group of camels.
'Have an extremely beautiful wife for nothing!'
This honor will go with you forever."

The boys picked willow branches,
And broke the branches to swear,
Keep this secret deep in their hearts.

This is the legend that,
Hero Kokcher exchanged Arkelkechy,
With camels in Buhara.

Manas and Majik made their farewell to their friends,
Whipped their steeds onto their journey.
He proceeded along the plateau,
And stopped his steed in a highland.

A valley full of pine trees were in front of them,
With a big red mountain on its opposite,
The trees were lush green.
Barikart was on the west,
Nalun city was in the front,
And Atebashi was on the east.
Manas and Majik,
Climbed on the top of Tarakay mountain and looked around.

In Terisayirk mountain,
Koshaoyi and his eighty warriors,
Were hunting brown bears and Mongolian gazelles,
Their shouting echoed with animals' howl,
With too many lynxes and gray wolves were shooting to death.

Shot wild goats down the cliff,
Chased male and female argali on the slope.

Red foxes stampeded along the river valley,
Were not escaping from hunters' eyes.

Hanging hides behind the saddles,
To send into elders yurts as gifts.
Their yell soared into the sky,
Warriors were all excited with their games.

Right this moment,
The young hero Manas,
Stirred his fine steed,
On Karakay hillock.

Koshaoyi was sturdy and had big size,
Karamark and Ketay people,
Regarded him with fear and reverence,
Everyone called him Giant Koshaoyi.
No one dare fight with him,
He was invincible and ever-victorious.

He always rode on a gray steed to climb mountains,
With a dream in his heart,
He wanted to meet Jagurp's son all the time.
He never told his dream to others,
But buried it deep in his heart.

Koshaoyi came and lived here by his plan,
He was always with magic since he was a boy.
He counted the days and worried,
It was almost the days of Jagurp's son's coming,
But why there was no news about that boy?

Koshaoyi believed without a shadow of doubt,
Once Berita was still alive,
All heroes would come and gather in Samurhan.

"If we do not attack from the side,

Who can drive enemies out of the palace?
Without strength and skills,
Who can get the fame in wrestling field?"
Koshaoyi was always sleepless,
Once he thought about Karamark's despotic power.

Warriors were excited,
Young boys felt proud.
Their horses were out of puff,
With hard run in the mountain.

All others were dizzy with the happiness of hunting,
Only the giant Koshaoyi,
Was still thinking about the hero he was waiting for,
And casted his eyes to the peaks again.

Just at that moment,
Manas rode on his steed Arckura,
And appeared into his sight.
The nine-year-old youth had a great figure,
Which was as strong as Arat peak.

As seeing Manas' valiant figure,
Koshaoyi's eyes run over with tears:
"I must go forward and welcome him,
Hug him before he gets off his steed."

Before he rode on his steed Totoru,
A thousand confused thoughts came into his mind.
"He comes to look for me from far away,
He thinks me as the sun at noon,
He knows me as he knows his own fingers,
He knows, me, Koshaoyi,
Is living on the slope beside the lake.

"He comes specially for me, his cousin.
He was the son of my eldest uncle but he is younger than me,

Should I go and welcome him or he comes to greet me?"
Koshaoyi was unable to make his mind.

Manas made a hurried journey without stop,
Pressing clop indicated the urgent advance.
He was ready to get off his steed,
To greet Koshaoyi,
When he saw Koshaoyi.

Koshaoyi said to Manas:
"Hi, you, the boy come from far away,
Do not get off your steed, just listen to me,
I am only a normal man,
But you are the valiant hero,
My words are all sincere.

"You need not get off,
Just march forward,
I will not blame you.
You have intended to get off and greet me,
So I have seen your respect to me."

Giant Koshaoyi was unique,
He stopped Manas from getting off.
His following was keen on hunting,
None of them was around him.

When they came near Koshaoyi,
Majik was so nervous,
He held his halter,
And dare not step forward.

Majik was reluctant,
But Manas went forward all the way,
With his straight and impressive looking.
He initiated his greeting to Koshaoyi,
Koshaoyi offered his hands immediately,

They shook hands warmly,
And failed to hide their excitement.

Koshaoyi put Manas' hands on his lips,
Kissed the hands,
Like a child sucking his mother's milk,
Then he led Manas' halter,
And stirred the steed forward.

They went down the mountain,
The companions came with them,
Did not know their whereabouts.
Majik stirred up his steed,
To seek their figures.

Koshaoyi led Manas' steed,
To Chechdob highland.
"Ancestor Chechdob①, please bless me!"
Koshaoyi shouted loudly,
Told the mountain his will.

People lived in Atbarsh,
Were called Kara Kirgiz,
People in Kangayi never dared to invade.
They herded their livestock in Aksai in summer,
And drove the livestock in winter,
To Kartbagt and Tetirs.
Set up big yurts there,
Horses neighed and smoke curled up.

The rich people lived on herding,
Stocked lots of bags of ghee.
Then they sent servants to Kashgar,
To exchange ghee for bags of tea,
And cubic sugar.

① Ancestor Chechdob: Chechdob is the name of a mountain, Kirgiz people take mountain as their father, so they call it Ancestor.

They bought cotton cloth,
To make their under clothes.

The place Koshaoyi built the castle,
Was called Chaldebar.

They held the halters of their steeds,
When they were close to the castle.
Koshaoyi invited Manas into the castle,
And let him live there for nine days.

In order to exorcise and ask for blessing,
They butchered ninety mares,
Held horse race and capturing goat games,
And another forty boys,
Played the game Kesidesi①,
Transgressor was washed out one by one,
The clamour raised up high to the sky.

People played game "Take Palace",
Chatlasichy② was in their game.
There was strong honey in the milkytea,
Rice like pearl,
Was bought from Mingbugu specially.

Giant Koshaoyi,
Treated Manas warmly for nine days,
They spoke to each other heart to heart.
The two boys Manas and Majik,
Waited until the leaving time came.
Manas told Koshaoyi,
His will of going to Samurhan.

"That is great, boys,

① Kesidesi: Transliterate from Kirgiz language, it is a local game of Kirgiz male youths.

② Chatlasichy: Transliterate from Kirgiz language, a kind of chess game.

Sixty tribes' Arashi①,
Today is the best day.
The war will break out soon,
But only me will be out of this war.

"If we all go to the front,
Our home front will be empty and dangerous,
Karaketay and Karamark people,
Must come to invade our home.

"Duohan, Sokso and Sotoy,
Will not lie in repose in Aranick,
They must make roundabout inquiries,
And attack us surprisingly via Kashgar."

Koshaoyi was adept in martial arts skill,
He stayed in Chechdob,
And was ready to garrison their home front.
If he did not stay,
Karamark troops would invade,
Like the flood.

They set off from the east,
Took Samurhan as their destination,
Marched toward the direction of west.
They went by like the wind.
After trekking a long way,
Samurhan finally turned up in their sight.

The paths wound through high peaks,
Rocks interlocked like dog's teeth,
Towering peaks rose majestically.
The wind in canyon howled like ghosts!
Karamark and Kirgiz,
Would draw the bow to each other.

① Arashi: The name of Kirgiz and Kazakh tribes' union.

Manas and Majik whipped their steeds,
And rushed onto the top of a mountain.
It was right the time,
Of our heroes' coming.

Vast Samurhan was just under the mountain,
Belsaz prairie was in front of it.
In Kirchin valley,
Garmgirchy and Shihay's subjects were living there.
Behind the mountain was Kuokoyden,
Belsaz prairie was in the mountain,
Where Kirchin valley was located.

The highland Manas climbed on,
Was called Tuyinchoku peak.
He climbed on and tied his steed,
Looked as far as his eyes could see,
He saw numerous yurts,
Located on Belsaz prairie,
Rows of foals were tied around the yurts.

Not far from the mountain,
Two utterly evil strong men,
Were whipping a young man.
Manas ordered Majik:
"Majik, go and have a look,
No matter the young man or those two strong men,
Asked them to come to me."

Majik rushed forward,
The two men shipping their halters,
Were scared to death,
When they saw Majik.
They dared not utter a word,
And lowered their heads like sinners,
Stood blankly like wooden poles.

The poor young man,
Why did he suffer such torture?
Majik was surprised,
So he asked the poor young man:
"Why do they beat you so cruelly?
Do you owe their money?
Or do you steal something from them,
Which made them so angry?"

The poor man suffered beating-up,
Felt too weak all over to answer,
He was beaten black and blue,
Two legs shivered ceaselessly.

"Now that he can not speak,
We can ask later."
Majik took all three men in front of Manas.

As seeing Manas' face,
They showed dread on their faces,
Stood blankly and quietly.

The poor young man raised his eyes,
And found a kind face.
So he spoke out his suffering:
"My name is Bordnie,
I never steal others' articles.

"I buried my hunting equipment in the valley,
To hunt the wild deer,
I have come to this valley so many times,
It is the grass lake in Tuyindob.

"I come across with these two Karamark people,
They come and hunt for fun.
I got three wild goats today,
They coveted my prey so much.

"They asked me for my prey,
I gave them one goat,
Let them cut it half,
Tied behind their saddle,
So they need not return empty.

"But they asked me to present them three goats,
I want to leave one for my family,
And they purposely make difficulties for me.
They said not only all the livestock we feed,
But also all the wild animals in the mountain,
Are belonged to them, Karamark people.

"I was too angry,
So I argued with them.
But they tied me tightly,
And bashed me to bleed.

"They are Kontoy's following,
Those Karamark headmen,
Are armored well,
And act like overlords every day,
They burn Kirgiz's hearts every day,
By their power.
I did nothing wrong,
You can let them explain this."

Fury burned in Manas' breast,
He could not bear any more,
With his angry eyes opening widely.
The two damned Karamark people,
Were nearly scared to death.
They dared not say any word,
They shrank back their neck,
And lifted their legs to run away.

Before they took the step,

Majik had pounced upon them.
Their attempt of fleeing,
Was cleared away in Majik's hands.

Manas controlled his temper,
And let them tell him the whole story.
All Bordnie said were true,
And without any exaggeration.
That was the cause of the event,
Kirgiz people then,
Suffered outrages like this.

Karamark and Ketay people,
Were looking down their noses at every other nation.
In Samurhan,
People of Tajik, Kalcha,
Jurdget, Juda,
Kara Karlpark, Uzbek,
And numerous blue-eyed Nuoyi lived there.
They were dominated by Karamark,
When would be the end of their miserable lives?

Placemen collecting harsh taxes came everyday,
Which made people had no peace,
They were forced to open their barns,
And gave their wheat away free.

Daily necessities also should be provided in time,
If anyone did it a little bit slow,
Beating-up was waiting for him.
Heavy yokes were on their shoulders,
Cold shackles were on their necks.

A little bit discontentment and resistance,
Would cause their bitterly sufferings in dungeon.
People could only swallow insult and humiliation silently,
And be absolutely obedient.

They had no power to confront Karamark,
They could only bury the humiliation deep in their heart.

The Karamark headman was cruel,
So were his followers,
Who did just as they pleased.
The poor young man did not give away the wild goats,
He hunted free to the Karamark,
So he was beat up.

Manas' hairs stood on end with anger after hearing it,
He ordered Majik immediately:
"Majik, you also heard the cause,
It is time for you to take heart of grace,
To punish these two bad guys."

Hero Majik lifted a big stone,
And threw at the two bad guys,
As easy as stepping on small grass,
Without any hesitation,
No matter how hard they begged for mercy.

The two guys were scared to death,
They lost their breaths,
And cried out with scare,
But no one could save their lives.

Manas looked at Bordnie,
And asked him:
"Who is the headman of this herd village?
Who is the master,
Of the horses over the slope?

"On the vast prairie,
The yurts are in straight rows,
Who is in charge of this village?

Do you really know,
Where we are from and who we are?"

Bordnie stared at Manas,
With a dull scared look in his eyes.
His mind came back to himself gradually,
Then he began to tell his thinking.

His face was already covered with tears,
As he began to talk:
"I was a Kirgiz of Aledgen tribe,
But I live a more miserable life after I came here.
The domineering Karamark people,
Run amuck everywhere in silk clothes.
Wherever Kirgiz go and live,
We suffer from their insult at any time.

"The countless horses all over the slope,
Are belonged to Garmgirchy and Shihay.
The dense yurts on the prairie,
Were forced to gather together,
And accept others' domination.
Men are forced to go to work,
As slaves.

"I have no idea about your background,
Unless you tell me.
You saved my life today,
But I should remind you,
To go and leave here as quickly as you can.

"We always stay away from Karamark people,
To tell our difficulties,
To Garmgirchy and Shihay in secret.
I have no ability to avenge,
I only could go back home silently.

"Karamark must come soon,
To look for these two guys;
They will ransack the river valley and desolate sands,
And finally find out their corpses.

"Numerous Kirgiz will lose their lives,
Because of this.
'It must be Kirgiz who did this.'
They will come in great anger,
To ask us to pay our lives for these two lives.

"'You Kirgiz must pay for these two lives,
You should give half of your livestock.'

"They will go even further,
To plunder us violently,
'Bury enough gold and silver with the dead,
Dig fine deep tomb to bury them.'

"Like sheep meet ferocious wolf,
Garmgirchy will feel helpless,
And Shihay will also have nothing to do,
For their unreasonable claim.
And there will be some flattering flunkies,
Help them to look for those two guys.

"Once you let me go today,
I will not stay until tomorrow,
I have wife, children,
And father living with me,
All my property,
Can be carried by a single horse.
As long as I can control my own life,
I will flee toward the direction of Tashkent.

"All the things I have seen and heard,
All the complaints I have in my heart,

Whom can I pour out my troubles?
I am observing your appearance carefully,
You must be a hero because of your strength.
Please do not let me, such a pilgarlic, guess,
But tell me directly who you are."

"You are just a nobody,
You do not need to know my name,
And I need not tell you my identity.
Please listen and remember every of my word,
Then set out without delay.

"You should keep away from other people,
And deliver a message to Garmgirchy.
Recount him,
The things you saw and heard,
And your experience of being abused.

"After you inform Garmgirchy,
You can go back home and rest at ease.
For my arrival,
Happy life will descend on all of you.

"I do not tell you my name today,
And you do not need to inquire about me,
My name is widely known.
You have three goats here,
But you only have one horse and no companion,
How can you carry these back home?

"I can not help you send your quarries back home,
But you can put them here for a while,
When you come back here in the evening,
You can carry them home."

Bordnie was so excited,
That tears gathered in his eyes;

"My hero, you give me the order,
To deliver message to Garmgirchy,
And then carry my quarries back home,
When the stars twinkle in the sky.

"You asked me to stay at home,
And wait for my happy life.
Your apparel and mount are different from others,
I will recount to Garmgirchy.

"I ever heard much hearsay,
Please allow me to ask a question:
My father mentioned more than once,
A hero called Manas will come into this world.

"If what he said is true,
Are you just the hero Manas?
Please confirm it,
I will maintain strict secrecy of it.

"I do not have to escape at night,
Leave my hometown for nowhere.
Please tell me the truth,
If you are Manas,
And you can expel Karamark for us.

"I want to keep myself alive,
But I have nowhere to go,
I do not know who will be our savior?"
He asked again and again,
To make it clearly.

Manas did not answer his questions directly,
"Please set off right now!
Go and tell Garmgirchy in details,
All what you have seen.
Do not woolgather and flee away,

Just stay and wait at home."

Bordnie dare not say something more,
But he watched Manas' expression secretly.
If Manas gave black look,
No one could be at ease.

As he picked up two rear legs of the goats,
And left in a hurry,
To tell to the whole village,
All that he had seen.

Majik waved to him and said:
"How is your horse?
Can it carry all these quarries away once?
If it is strong enough,
You might as well take all quarries away."

"It breathes heavily with only me on it,
It is skin and bones.
And I only have this single fleshless horse,
In my barn.

"I want to graze my old poor horse,
On that prairie.
It is a stone-piled pasture,
And there is a spring on it."

Majik sent Bordnie on the slope,
And carried the two rear legs,
Of one of the wild goat.
He put kidneys and livers of three goats,
Into the belly of one goat:
"There are six kidneys and three livers,
You'd better carry them with you.
Your back has already been badly mutilated,
With the cruel beating-up from Karamark,
All your family are waiting for you,

So you should take this back home first.

"After stars hang in the sky,
Bordnie, you go by yourself,
And take all legs of goats back home."

Bordnie rushed forward without a moment's hesitation,
Like an afeared hare.
His injured back was unbearably hurt,
The wound on his shoulders made him unable to stand.
His sweat flew down his back,
Mixed with his blood.
He went back home,
With long stride.

Bordnie was a dutiful son,
He presented the quarries to his father.
He did not go to visit Garmgirchy first,
But told his father all what he had seen.

After hearing the expression of appearance of Manas,
Poor elder Tolan Bayi,
Muffled his stomach,
And his white beard quivered ceaselessly.

The old man was so excited,
And shook his head ceaselessly,
His tears dropped like pearls.
He was wild with joy,
And within an inch of yelling out.

Tolan Bayi was over seventy years old,
He had wide experience and extensive knowledge.
He was ever Garmgirchy's neighbour.
And he had a retentive memory,
Most things he could remember after hearing.

He was always concerned about Manas,

And was looking forward to seeing him:
"When can I have a chance to see him?
Once I can see the hero,
I will have the courage,
To catch a Karamark and cut his head down.

"As long as my dream comes true,
I will be happy even let me die."
Although he was already old,
Judged from his appearance,
He must be a hero when he was young.

His name was Tolan Bayi,
He told his son countless times of the hearsay,
Like twisting hand knitting yarn,
Never had an end.

"My boy, you can not delay any more,
I am wild with joy,
Like I get a son at this age.
And it also makes my heart ache too much,
As seeing your wound all over.

"It is time to pay off,
All our sufferings and tribulation.
Good boy! Go ahead,
Right now,
To report all the things to Garmgirchy."

Seeing his father's happy expression,
Poor Bordnie,
Was highly delighted,
Although he was so tired.

"My father, why are you so happy?"
He even had no time to ask this question,
Before he left his father,

The crupper was wetted by sweat,
And was marked by the lash.
He met Garmgirchy,
Just out of the yurt.
He took a glance around them,
Began to tell Garmgirchy,
All what he had seen and heard,
Without any hesitation.

He told every single detail,
Of what he had seen to Garmgirchy.
He even forgot the etiquette of greeting,
As he began his words,
Because of his excitement.
He stood still,
After he finished all his words.

Bordnie could not express clearly to Garmgirchy,
Of the characteristic of the coming person,
Because he was too excited.

Garmgirchy made detailed inquiry vexedly:
"Hey, you, Bordnie,
Did you really see clearly,
The color of that hero's mount?
Was there anyone else with you?
Please tell me the details."

"I do not know the name of that hero,
But I know the other young man's name.
They called each other,
So I know one of them is called Majik.

"I watched carefully at that time,
About the color of the hero's mount.
That is a grey steed.
It is unique and unusual,

There are magic marks on its crupper.
I reckon it can cross Samurhan sea easily,
Without effort.

"For another hero,
He is as strong and tall as the mountain,
But I forgot his characteristic in a hurry.
Honorific Garmgirchy,
Please forgive my carelessness.

"I told him I should flee away,
But he let me to deliver message to you,
And let me stay at home securely."

Garmgirchy continued the talk immediately:
"Bordnie, my boy,
Go back your home right now,
And do not worry anything.
The hero your father always mentioned,
Is just this boy.
Before you go and tell the good news to your father,
You can come into my yurt and have a rest."

Garmgirchy stood at the door,
And called his wife:
"Please take out our horse milk,
Let Bordnie take back his home.
And give him some cubic sugar,
For Tolan Bayi making tea.

"Horse tharm and stripe,
He can take as much as he wants.
Please set your heart at rest,
Khuda must give us more."

Bordnie came into the yurt,
Took all the food unreservedly,
And went back his home,

He told all the things he had seen,
To his father in detail.
He could not stop giving his wife orders:
"Ladle out the horse milk and let father taste.
I have cut the goat livers up,
Cook it soon and serve our father."

The boys would come at night,
Garmgirchy was waiting for hero's coming in a sweat,
He could not hold back his excited feeling,
And could not sit still for a while,
He went in and out his yurt off the reel.

The dusk was coming quietly,
Which dimmed all things on earth.
Hero Manas mounted his steed and started off,
Majik followed him fast.

Manas remembered Akberita's words,
"Your father Jagurp,
Is the brother of Shihay,
They have same father and same mother."
Manas considered it on his way:
"Shihay and my father,
Were given birth by a same mother.
He is my own uncle,
I should go and visit him first."

They went down along the slope,
And shivered with cold,
But their steeds were sweating all over.
They had already made sure the location of Shihay's yurt,
Followed spring water could find the mouth of the spring.

They went near the yurt,
But no one came out to welcome them.
Whether guests came or not,
No one cared.

In the middle was a bank of the river,
Only a narrow path led to the top of the mountain.
Garmgirchy lived on one side,
And Shihay lived on the other side of the bank.

The boys dismounted from their steeds,
Without anyone coming and welcoming them.

They went into the yurt,
And greeted Shihay.
It was the moment of the dusk,
But there was no light,
In the dim yurt.

Shihay looked as serious as a bull,
That was ready to butt anyone.
His wife sat in silence,
Like a rafter of the yurt.

"Boys, please sit!"
Finally Shihay squeezed out a few words.

The master did not cook for them,
And also had no intension of serving his guests.
But only add little milk into the tea,
And put a few naans baked with creme,
On a small dining cloth.

They cut up some cooked horse tharm and neck,
And put in the plate,
The hungry boys,
Could only make it do for their supper.
Shihay and his wife,
Did not notice the boys' expression.

Their housemen and bonnes,
Were all with fat cheeks and big bellies.

Many bonnes shuttled in and out,
They were tall and sturdy:
Their big and fat hips made them act slowly,
How could they treat guests from afar?

They did not dare to give suggestions to hostess,
On how to entertain guests.
They were just half-replete with the food,
And no more horse milk was served for them.

The rest horse milk,
Was filled back to the leather bag.
The bedding was ready for them,
They fell in sleep with their stomach half-full.

Garmgirchy was so anxious,
"Did Bordnie tell lies to me?"
He went in and out for many times.
He sat quietly for a long time,
And discussed with his wife about this again.

He had asked the servants,
To put all food on table cloth.
He ordered to prepare a goat,
And made it to be ready for butchering,
To hold "Sada" ceremony,
To welcome the hero.
But Manas did not appear,
After waiting a whole day.

Garmgirchy was deep in thought,
But he was still in a hopeless tangle.
He seemed to be in a trance,
But he sat up suddenly.

He stepped out of the yurt,
The sky was studded with stars,

And stainless clear.
The moon hung in the sky,
Like a bright lamp.

Garmgirchy found suddenly,
Beside Shihay's yurt,
Ackura was standing there,
Its figure was clear to see under the moon.

He took on his robe,
With two sleeves waved.
Giant Garmgirchy,
Was strong and healthy,
He crossed the river,
To check the magic steed carefully.

The extraordinary steed in front of him,
Was very famous Arckura.
"Shihay can not fall to sleep now."
He strode up to the yurt.

Giant Garmgirchy put out his hand,
Opened the door of the yurt.
Shihay lied on the bed,
In deep sleep.
The milk-white moon light,
Came into the yurt,
Through the skylight,
Which made the yurt bright.
Manas lied on his back,
His face was clear to see.

Garmgirchy stepped forward,
Patted Manas gently on the shoulder.
Manas opened his eyes and glanced at Garmgirchy,
And went into sleep again.
"My boy, wake up!"
Garmgirchy shook manas.

Manas was awakened,
Then he woke Majik up.
They went out of the yurt,
Garmgirchy began his questions:
"My boy, could you tell me your name?
Please lead your steeds to rest at my stable."

Majik led their steeds back soon,
In a obscure corner under the cliff,
And in the valley behind the herd village,
Garmgirchy had chosen a site,
And dug a cave there.

The steeds were hidden in the cave,
Garmgirchy, leader of the herd village,
Showed his extraordinary ability and talent.
He led the boys to his yurt,
Without any hesitation.

As they got home,
Garmgirchy's wife went out to welcome.
She could not conceal her joy,
Like a mother got her expecting baby.

She carried a wooden bowl filled full with water,
Grasped a cotton string in her other hand.
One end of the cotton string,
Was hidden in her sleeve.

Mixed flour and oil together,
Smoke curled upwards on the tray;
The bowl with water went round the top of hero's head,
The water then was poured down on the ground.

Put the cotton string on the ground,
Let hero jumped over it.
Smoked flour and oil,

Also went round over hero's head.

Garmgirchy and his wife,
Were in a great bustle.
They did their pray,
And laid a goatling down.

Sharp knife cut down the head of the goatling,
Cut the chest open,
Took out its warm lung,
To pat hero's head,
The traditional ceremony was going on.

The blood of the goatling,
Flew like a river;
Garmgirchy also butchered a foal.

Heads-up Garmgirchy,
Was always resourceful.
He dug out a bundle of branches on the ground,
And cut the branches into forty segments.
He uttered the incantation,
And scattered the segments toward the direction of Karamark①.
After the boys had eaten and drunk to their satisfaction,
They went to have a rest.

Garmgirchy failed to fall in sleep,
He was waiting for the day coming.
Before the sun showed up,
He had sent nine herdsmen,
To all directions.

"Expel evil influences and invoke blessings,
Butcher livestock in odd number is lucky."
They found out,

① Scatter toward the direction of Karamark: All the above show the Kirgiz ceremony of expelling the evil under the basis of Shamanism.

Nine mares without giving birth within a year①.
The Kirgiz scattered in the mountain,
Received his invitation and gathered together.
Horse meat was already cooked in cauldron,
The ladle made of willow,
Was stirred the meat and skimmed the foam.

The guests came one after another,
They all sat on the floor.
Delicious food,
Was full on the table cloth,
How could they eat up all the food.

Horse milk was filled ceaselessly,
Served by hard working servants.
Kayakchy② and Kumzchy③,
Were being played emotionally,
Everyone enjoyed it.

Children rode on three-year-old horses,
To have a race.
Numerous livestock were their prizes,
People enjoyed the food and had great fun.

"Summer went away and autumn comes,
Kirgiz always scatter on the prairie,
I had no chance to get together with all of you,
Now I held the horse milk festival.

"Tie up steeds' mane and let it stand,
Part the horse tail and tie it up.
Bring your fine steed here,

① Nine mares: Kirgiz people take odd number especially nine as luck in sacrifice ceremony.

② Kayakchy: Kayak is a traditional Kirgiz bowstring musical instrument. Kayakchy is the person who play this instrument.

③ Kumzchy: Kumz is a traditional Kirgiz plucked instrument. The person who plays it called Kumzchy. "Chy" has the meaning of expert and master.

To take part in the horse race and carry goat."
Garmgirchy made a brief speech.

Every child in the horse race,
Got a headband.
The judge drove the horses,
To the starting point.

The livestock used as the prizes,
Were all tied up on the rope.
Garmgirchy's words were like honey,
Made the day more sweet and joyful.

He asked his servants,
To filled bags full with cooked meat,
And put the bags on guests' horses.
Grease exuded out from the bags,
And stained saddles.
He sent guests back home happily.

Guests all went back at dusk,
He presented the two boys meat of a whole horse,
He asked servants to carry the meat out on the table cloth.
And ordered another four young men,
To cut the horse meat into pieces.

Except four hooves and the skull of the horse,
The boys ate all the meat up,
Left nothing.
Jagurp's son Manas,
Ate the big piece of meat at a mouthful.

The boys drank and ate,
Without any restraint.
They finished forty bowls horse milk,

And three Kokuer① milky wine.

Garmgirchy was very pleased,
With the boys:
"Kirgiz has suffered all kinds of humiliation,
The bright future will come soon."

The boys had been asleep in satisfaction,
Garmgirchy guarded the steeds,
Let no one find this secret.

Garmgirchy took out scripture,
Read it carefully,
To plan the future for Manas.
He read Asturap again,
And counted the exact day on his fingers.
According to the scripture,
Heroes' beloved elder Bakay,
Was on the edge of returning back.

Manas would go on an expedition soon,
It brooked no delay,
To make fine sword and lance for him.
The hero would not just sleep at ease,
He would expel Georoy,
And all other Karamark leaders out.

Lame carpenter Bolicby,
Led two blacksmith assisstants,
Carried their tools on the back of oxen,
Led two cyan oxen,
With strings made of ox hair on their waists,
Appeared in Garmgirchy's sight.

Three months ago,

① Kokuer: Big leather kettle used to carry milky wine.

Bolicby set out from Bagda.
People came and asked for his help,
With their steeds.
Garmgirchy made his steed ready,
To welcome them.

Let us put this aside,
Talk about the two Karamark,
Died on the slope.

Karamark did not show up on the first three days,
But the following six days they came and checked each day.
They searched in the herd village.
They searched in the mountain,
Found their corpses under a big rock,
But no one could move the rock.

They did not get the corpses,
Without asking Kirgiz for paying with their lives either.
But they came to the village every day,
On the excuse of looking for their fellows,
To extort more gold and silver from Kirgiz.

"The corpses can not be found in the wild."
But the Kirgiz were unable to bear the harassment.
Karamark people came and went every day,
They should provide horse milk all the time.

At dusk one day,
Forty Karamark people,
Appeared in front of Shihay Khan's yurt suddenly.

There was a Karamark master-hand could foresee with divine accuracy,
And could tell exactly the trace of people who came and went.

His name was Kertgoy,
And he was over seventy years of age.

He followed Arckura's steps to chase,
And just found and stopped at Shihay Khan's door.

Kalterbash,
Shihay Khan's wife,
Was a shrewish woman,
She was brave and was with a ready tongue.

When the coming persons came into the yurt,
Kalterbash asked without the least sign of fear:
"You forty guys come into my yurt,
Are you going to hold a wedding here?
Could it be said that I have a daughter to marry off?

"You come in a hurry,
Are you looking for your companion,
Is my husband,
The person your companion.
You forty come together,
Do you have something urgent to deal with!"
She expressed a taunt both in her words and on her face.

The head of these forty persons,
Was a man called Titigy,
He was arrogant and unyielding,
Since he was a boy.

The short guy,
Began to talk wildly:
"He never gets wrong,
In tracing clues and divining.
He is the master-hand, Kertgoy,
He has divined clearly,
The ins and outs of the matter.

"The two of your Kirgiz hunters,
Killed our two soldiers.

The two corpses were on their backs,
And were under a big rock.
We have been looking for several days,
And we have just found their corpses.

"It is not normal person who did this,
It must be Garmgirchy,
He still opposes us till now.
If it is not a giant,
Who else can move such a big rock?

"A fine steed came into your village,
And you hid it.
We have looked around the valleys,
For nine days,
But we did not find its trace.
So we specially invited Kertgoy,
He checked and helped us find out the trace of the steed.

"Garmgirchy worked hand in glove with Shihay,
They hid the steed.
As long as you tell us the secret,
We will withdraw from your yurt soon,
Why we forty need stay here?

"If you have hidden the steed,
We will kill you, old lady,
And cut Garmgirchy and Shihay's belly open,
Take out their bowels unreservedly.

"If you do not want to bear such sufferings,
Take out enough livestock,
To pay for our soldiers' lives.
We do not come for visiting,
But only for asking a life for a life.
You, such a dad-burned old lady,
How could you dare provoke us?"

Kalterbash was a woman strong in character,
How could others read her heart?
She did not feel scared at all,
All the secrets were kept in her heart.

The boys came at that dusk,
Then Garmgirchy came and woke them up,
And took the boys to his yurt.
Moonlight shone into her yurt,
As bright as the day,
She saw and kept all these into her heart.

When Garmgirchy took the boys away,
Kalterbash had guessed correctly,
"Hero Manas is just this one."

She had quarreled with her husband,
Shihay Khan for this thing,
For nine days:
"You are not qualified to be a Khan, go to die!
The reputation of Shihay Khan,
Should be thrown into the tomb!

"You are unworthy of the master,
Of the livestock on the prairie.
You do not comfort your families,
And you can not appraise good person rightly.
For the child of the same blood came specially,
You could not treat sincerely.

"You are over sixty years old,
And you have experienced too many things,
But you fail to tell white from black,
And tell right from wrong now.

"The child consider you as his uncle,
His father's brother,

So Manas came especially for you,
But you are so cold to him.

"He is exactly Manas, not anyone else,
If he is a stranger,
How could he come to your door rashly?"
She threw stones at her husband ceaselessly,
Made him have no peace and quiet.

Followed the spoor of the steed,
Karamark came into her yurt.
Facing the Karamark person,
Kalterbash showed no fear,
But even more intrepid than usual:
"You are so unbridled,
If you have eaten marmot,
Do you come to overthrow Shihay Khan?

"You have made it up,
And come to ask so called life.
I will never believe your free tongues,
Unless I see the corpses,
Otherwise do not act shamelessly here.

"You ask us to pay for your fellow's life,
How could we get so much gold and silver,
To offer to you continuously?

"We have had no spare livestock to give out,
We only have our lives left,
Why shall we let you torture us?
My hero, where are you?
Please help us catch these damned guys!"

Kalterbash was boiling with rage,
As she saw the sabre hanging on the left of the yurt,
She unsheathed the knife at full speed,

Rattled it and rushed at the Karamark persons.

Her earth-shaking yowl,
Startled all her neighbours.
"What happened on earth?"
Villagers gathered and talked.
They scattered,
At the seeing of Karamark soldiers.

Karanuoyi's son Majik,
Rushed into her yurt,
With a gown on him.
Kertgoy observed carefully,
And recognized Majik as a brave boy.

Kertgoy stammered badly,
Over the words.
He pointed at Majik,
Without saying a word clearly.

Manas was swift of foot,
He rushed into the crowd quickly.
The two boys were waiting,
For the right time to attack the enemies severely.

"I want to see,
Whether the boys are brave enough."
Garmgirchy observed calmly,
But he could not restrain his excitement.

Titigy was fierce by nature,
He was very overbearing.
He stared angrily at the old lady,
And clenched his teeth tightly.

He was such a short man with yellow hair,
Just looked like an unkempt monster:

"Your husband keeps silent,
Why are you so conceited, Kalterbach?

"We give you freedom these many years,
Let you live in your way,
But it makes you become a mad dog.

"Kalterbash——
You are furious and out of control,
Like a wild boar!

"Kalterbash——
You are rapacious and savage,
Like a wild wolf!

"Kalterbash——
You'd better sleep on your side tonight,
In order not to let your crotch ache!

"Do not stay here any more minute, brothers,
Let us set off now,
To report this to hero Kontoy.

"We will come back here tomorrow,
Then we will tug Kalterbash's hair,
Take her as a goat without the head,
Let our warriors snatch and pull,
Let's see whether she is still brave."

After hearing Titigy's words,
Karamark got up one by one and were ready to go.

Right at the moment,
Manas rushed into the yurt like a hungry tiger,
It was the time for forty mad dogs to die.

Majik had already acted,

He caught them one by one.
No one could escape from his hand,
No one could move either,
Forty mad dogs were all tied tightly together by Majik.

It was not good to split blood inside,
So they were pulled out of the yurt,
And threw them down on the ground,
Cut their bellies open as cutting watermelon.

It was just the golden autumn,
Fat livestock were in right season to be butchered.
Forty fat mares,
Were butchered overnight,
And gave out to all villagers to enjoy.

Majik, himself,
Tied the forty corpses together,
Carried on his back,
And threw all them on Kuyelm sandbank.
He made the achnatherum splendens into curtain,
To ward off the sand.
Then he took away the curtain,
The running sand was going forward quietly,
And buried the corpses solid.

He asked the herdsmen to drive their sheep there,
To step the sand solid.
The next morning,
Garmgirchy led the boys,
To set off from the village.
He ordered the villagers designedly:
"If Karamark come,
Neither flatter,
Nor warmly treat them."

Except Bordnie and his wife and Tolan Bayi,

Kalterbash and Shihay,
And Garmgirchy,
These six people,
No one else knew the boy was Manas.
Garmgirchy led the boys,
Busy with their journey forward.

Let them go on their journey,
We need say something else.
The story of his uncle Bakay,
And the famous craftsman Bolicbye,
Was on the tip of the tongue and was going out.

Those twenty people led by Kerglechal,
We also need to talk about,
Kirgiz, please listen carefully,
The following story will be more interesting.

Manas' weapons

The elder Bakay,
Was famous for his wisdom.
He was of the same age with Giant Koshaoyi,
As wise as Berita,
And of one mind with Garmgirchy.

Kirgiz produced Manas,
There was none equal him on earth,
All enemies went down on their knees.
It was just Manas,
Took his heart of grace to revenge.
He could only start an uprising from afar,
In order not to disturb common people.

After hero Onuzdo died,
All his families and offsprings,
Were expelled by Karamark.
In order to be the neighbour with Koshaoyi,
To look after each other in urgency,
Bakay decided to move whole his family.

He led six hundred households,
Came and lived in Kelmite mountain.
Kirgiz-renowned smith,
Famous Bolicbye,
Moved with him.

Badakshan, Balik and Kelmite,
The places surrounded by mountains,

Became their home.
They lived there,
To avoid the disaster of fighting.

"We can not have no leader."
Hero Bakay,
Became the leader of these six hundred households.

Bakay was not a commonplace person,
He always could take a broad and long view.
He had uninterrupted contacts,
With Akberita in Altay,
With Garmgirchy in Samurhan,
And with Giant Koshaoyi in Atbarsh.

He sent his servants around to inquire about,
The good news of the coming of Hero Manas,
In Bulunto prairie in Altay.

Bakay had already known that,
Manas had fallen out with his father Jagurp.
Manas followed the plough in Turpan.
The bumper harvests in succession,
Paid for in his hard work and sweat,
It was enough for him to exchange for Arckura.

Akberita had prepared well,
The gold saddle and silver stirrup for Manas.
Under the guide of Akberita,
Manas went to visit Koshaoyi.
Then he waved farewell with Koshaoyi,
And he should be on the way to Samurhan at the moment.

The giant Garmgirchy in Arip,
Would lead Manas,
To see Bakay.
And he had already known this clearly:

"I must go and welcome them in person."
He told himself.

The lame craftsman Bolicbye,
Followed with him fast.
He also urged Tulik and Tolik,
To go with him together.

The four of them,
Would see the hero face to face soon,
Bakay was full of excitement,
Like the flame of fire.

In order to meet Bakay soon,
Garmgirchy spurred his steed,
Was busying running on the way for several days,
From Samurhan.

Garmgirchy was wild with joy,
When he thought of seeing Bakay soon.
Bakay's voice and expression,
Presented in his mind repeatedly.

He sped down the basin,
There was an old forest around Samurhan.
It was called Kerkmoinock highland,
Then he climbed on it.

They climbed over six mountains day and night,
Without taking a rest,
And without taking pity on their steeds either.
When they climbed on the top of another mountain,
They looked around,
Observed carefully,
To avoid coming across with Karamark person.

They looked far in the distance,

And found four figures,
Climbing over the hill.
One of the figures was conspicuous,
Let them feel amiable.

With a white Kemant gown on,
White beard flapping in the wind.
He rode on a horse at a gallop,
Moon-like face was shinning.
No matter who saw his expression,
They would be influenced by him.

Garmgirchy made his eyes open widely,
As he saw the figure in front of him:
"He must be leopard Bakay.
The other three warriors,
One must be lame craftsman Bolicbye,
Another two,
They might be hero Tulik and Tolik.
It might be right,
I should go quickly and have a look at them."

Garmgirchy spurred his steed,
And went on the hill in the front,
As he could see clearly Bakay,
He dismounted the steed,
And walked at a stride to Bakay.

The giant Garmgirchy,
Threw himself forward,
To meet Bakay.

Jagurp Bayi's son Manas,
Was radiant with joy.
Manas, the name like thunder piercing the ear,
Was given by a sage.
Before he came to this world,

His name had already been spread over the earth.

Manas pulled the halter of Arckura,
Was ready to dismount.
The elder with white beard on the gray horse,
Shouted immediately:

"Boy, please keep on your steed!
You should think carefully,
Before you were born,
How we were insulted by Karamark.

"As hearing your coming to this world,
And growing into a hero,
I come to here in great joy.
It is not our custom,
To let you dismount your horse,
Which will endanger your glory."

As hearing it,
Manas held his hand together on the steed,
To greet each other.
Bakay stroke his long beard,
And observed Manas with his eyes open.

Manas was bright and brave,
Arckura never stopped skipping.
Manas asked first,
Name of the other side.

"My name is Bakay,
I am adrift everywhere all these years,
I do not know where my home is.
This is a craftsman,
Famous Bolicbye.
And those two are his twin sons,
Tulic and Tolic.

"The brave warrior on Arckura,
Has the responsibility as high as a mountain,
Friends feel warm in heart when hear his name,
And enemies feel scared.

"Giant Garmgirchy, my bosom friend,
I know even you do not tell me,
This is Manas, Jagurp's son,
He commands public respect and is the only leader,
Of our sixty tribes of Arashi.
But who is this,
The young man beside him?"

"Bakay, you know his father,
When his mother was expecting,
His father went away suddenly,
He is Majik, son of Karanuoyi."
Garmgirchy said clearly,
Without preamble to Bakay.

Bakay continued their talk:
"There is something I must mention,
To the young hero, our leader.
Giant Garmgirchy, Bolicbye,
Please listen carefully too.

"After Onuzdo's death,
Sixty tribes' Arashi,
Are suffered devastation from Karamark.
Murderous Karamark,
Take away our livestock and prairie,
Do not let us live freely on fertile prairie.
They separated us by each five households a Karamark master,
Monitor us like we are sheep,
We have no freedom but live in great fear.

"As hearing the coming of Manas,

Karamark guarded us more severely.
Under the protection of Allah,
Manas could come to this world safely."

Bolicbye ordered Tulic,
To report the good news to Koshaoyi.

Bakay went on his talk:
"Please go and have a rest at my yurt,
Koshaoyi will come soon,
We need not stay here and wait.

" 'You do not know the habit of borrowed horse,
You only can stare at its horsehair;
You are afraid of making borrowed leather coat dirty,
So you just stare at the sleeves of the coat.'
This is a Kirgiz saying,
Which just tally with our current actual situation.

"Akberita stays in Altay,
Jagurp Bayi is also far away from here,
So when Koshaoyi comes,
We should discuss how to make arms for our hero."

After hearing Bakay's words,
The lame craftsman Bolicbye,
Continued the topic:
"Heroes, if you all agree,
I will tell you:
Our hero need a hard helmet,
An iron coat Badna made of dicty-weaved iron wire.
He also needs a vest, armour, battle gown,
And a hard breastplate.

"Iron-made shoulder pad and knee pad,
Are also very important.
Even firelock for shooting, heavy bow for drawing,

Battle-ax and long spear for fighting,
And sabre in sheath.

"If let me make these equipments for our hero,
I will make them the best in the world.
These arms and equipments our hero uses,
Will be talked by generations,
Till the end of the world.

"Hero Bakay,
We need not go to your village,
Need not turn the heads of our horses back,
To Garmgirchy's pasture either.

"We need hunt male and female argali,
So why not stay here on this slope.
Koshaoyi can find suitable place to go,
We just need wait for him,
Then we can go together.

"Tulic, start off right now,
And come back within six days.
We can not stay for a long time,
In order to wait Koshaoyi."
He ordered to his son,
And urged Tulic to set out soon.

When Tulic arrived by Koshaoyi's side,
He told all the things in details:
"My father asked me start off soon,
To report you Hero's news.
He said if you get the news,
You will not delay even a second.

"I set out from Samurhan,
I hid and rested,
In the valley during the day time,

And whipped my horse at top speed,
Endured much hardship to come to see you."

As soon as Tulic finished his words,
Koshaoyi had readily taken the hint.
He asked the servant to lead out the steed Totoru,
And make the saddle ready to set out.
He asked Koyikeldy to accompany,
And ordered Tulic to follow him.

They took enough food,
Set out from Atbarsh,
To Samurhan,
Day and night.

The steed Totoru ran at great speed,
Koshaoyi arrived by the side of Manas,
In a few days.
Bakay, Koshaoyi and Garmgirchy,
Embraced together warmly.
They greeted each other,
And kissed each other's finger tip.

The heroes sat on the ground,
Expressed their intense feeling,
And discussed the grand plan.
Bakay spoke out frankly,
Without reserve his ideas:

"Sage Koshaoyi, my friend,
Garmgirchy, my bosom friend!
Craftsman Bolicbye is my neighbour,
We never separate with each other.

"All seven of us in presence,
Are having a common wish.
Kirgiz lived in misery,

Are looking forward to the coming of Manas.

"Karamark was scared to death,
They were afraid Manas would bring them disaster.
They gathered all Kirgiz pregnant women together,
Cut their bellies open mercilessly,
Mothers' blood dyed the earth red.

"They were further intensified,
They sent a headman to each herd village,
To watch us like sheep.

"To defend the safety of fellow countrymen,
Is always the responsibility of the hero from the old.

"Karamark killed so many mothers,
To avoid the birth of Manas.
Although they are inhuman,
But Manas was still born safely.

"Now, he is grown up,
The life of Kirgiz begins to change,
And we have got the chance to get together with our hero.
Except death,
All other wishes can be fulfilled in the world.

"We can not delay at all,
And must act as early as we can,
To make weapons for Manas."

Hearing Bakay's words,
All others nodded to show their agreement.
Giant Koshaoyi said:
"What kind of weapons he need,
We'd better ask Manas himself."

Hero Manas had a well-thought-out plan,

And was burning with eagerness for saying:
"Sage Koshaoyi, giant Bakay,
Hero Garmgirchy and Bolicbye,
I will explain the weapons I need to you,
Please listen carefully."

Manas talked to them,
And took giant Koshaoyi's sword.
He weaved the sword,
Then spoke surprisingly:

"The sword is nothing more than this,
Once we fight with Karamark,
A life-and-death fight,
We can capture such sword easily.

"We just waste time here to talk,
When will the ideal weapons be forged?
Who has such skills,
Where can we find such craftsman?"

Garmgirchy continued immediately,
Intended to stop Manas' talking.
He can not restrain his excitement,
With his head shaking;
"Koshaoyi, Berita and I,
Had such ideas once,
We thought Manas would like,
To choose weapons from our ready-made ones.
Now he is only nine years old,
When he grows up,
The appropriate weapon must be presented in front of him.

"It appears I am not right on this,
Bolicbye is here now,
He can forge all the weapons well.
Bolicbye, please tell us,

How to forge weapons for our hero?"

Bolicbye had short dry coughs,
Then raised his head and said:
"I will say the weapons I can forge one by one,
Manas, please listen carefully.

"Everyone has set forth his own view,
For a few hours.
I can forge Achalbaris① rapier,
It can cleave a camel into half.

"It can be curved into a circle freely,
And never be broken.
It will be a magical rapier,
No one can be alive under its edge.

"If you weave it gently,
More than two hundred people will die.
If it stabs into one's breast, his neck will be shook off,
If it cuts the tree,
It can break through the stone.
Nothing in the world will be harder than it.

"It can extend longer by itself,
The sword tip is red like the fire.
When you put it into the sheath,
It shortens to seven inches.
When you take out it,
It prolongs to forty inches automatically.

"When you weave it, it reflect the sunshine,
The sound of it roars to the sky.
If it meets the towery tree,
It can break the tree down immediately.

① Achalbaris: Transliterate from Kirgiz language, it means sharp rapier, it is the appropriative sword for Manas.

If you weave the sword,
You will see a ball of flame shining in the front.

"All-conquering sharps are on both sides,
Straight sword and curve sheath;
It cuts the rock like cutting the liver of sheep,
You should know the secret of the sword.
I give it the name 'Achalbaris',
This is the kind of sword I will forge.

"The magical gun forged for Manas,
Is also different from any others.
I need to mix,
Crimson Krim ore from Ketay,
Wulum ore from Russia,
Cyan iron ore from Baran,
And doughy lead ore together,
To smelt the best ore in the world.

"The shining Ackelat firelock①,
Is not long and not short, in right length.
I will polish the barrel of the gun carefully,
And find the sight bead of the gunhead and gunstock.

"The barrel of gun will be made of cyan iron,
I will use three ores,
To fusion the best iron,
And forge the best gun in the world.

"The earth-shaking gunshot——

① Ackelat firelock: Kirgiz language, it is the silvery white firelock only for Manas.

Like Koychager Firelock①,
The rumble of gunfire——
Like local Ochiker cannon,
If fire by heart——
It will be similar to Zanbric fire cannon.
If we are lucky enough——
It will be as powerful as Sandolen fire cannon.

"It should be tied with sixty trees together,
Before you open fire.

"The bullets are made,
Of the mixture of copper, lead and iron,
Then covered with iron sheet.
In order to prevent the smoke from coming out,
It must be sealed with bronze.

"Load the calf-size bullet in the cannon,
Ignite the blasting fuse,
Then it makes the world shake.

"Mountains can be leveled to the ground,
Lake water runs high.
Roosters crow at any time,
Donkeys leap and bray in the stable.
Infant cry in their cradle,
Elders are restless in bed.
Thick walls of the castle,
Collapse in a minute.

"Hearing the sound of the firelock,
Kirgiz will go around spreading the news in great joy.
'This is Manas' Ackelat firelock,
Today we finally hear its sound.'

① Koychager Firelock: According to legend, Koychager Firelock, local Ochiker cannon, Zanbric fire cannon and Sandolen fire cannon were the best firelock, fire cannon and local cannon in the world.

" Gunpost is the monster, bullet is the killer,
The base is harder than rock.
I will carve screw thread in the barrel of the firelock,
To make the bullets shot out,
Goes directly to the objective.

" The round gunpoint, apple-shaped gunhead,
Every shot will hit the target,
The hitting area will be the top of the whole mountain.
Hold Ackelat firelock on the back,
It will be just right for our hero ' s shoulder.
If you take this firelock,
Your life is secured.

" The bullets shot out from Ackelat firelock,
Seem to have eyes,
They will let enemies scared to death,
Let Kirgiz villagers be wild with joy.
Bullets are like jade in the river,
The gunpost is like the head of a person,
This is the firelock I will forge.

" The long spear must be forged,
By the clean steel I fusion,
And the white steel I smelt.
I need to look for in the forest,
The erect white ash,
I will smelt cyan steel also by myself.

" From thousands of trees,
Choose out erect and sleek tree trunk.
The spearhead is made from clean steel,
The point of the spearhead is made from black clean steel.

" This black steel,
Will be soaked by mosquito ' s venom,
Will be quenched by pig ' s urine,

The wound stabbed by it will never heal up.

"The spearhead and the handle,
Are connected perfectly.
The handle will be polished carefully,
And carve patterns with twelve kinds edges and corners.
I will choose thirty two greasepaint,
To paint the patterns on the handle.
'There is no second spear in the world like this.'
The sound when you weave the spear is like singer's singing.

"When you do battle in summer——
I will twine the tin wire over the handle,
To avoid your palm from sweating.
When you do battle in winter——
I will wrap the handle with cashmere cover,
To avoid your palm from freezing.

"It is capable of destroying anything,
It can pierce through the massive black rock.
The handle is as soft as the willow,
It can not be broken no matter how hard it is bent,
This is just the spear I will forge for the hero.

"When our lion grasp the spear,
Others will praise it as 'Sear Spear'①,
It will be on the lips of all Karashi people.
It will always be praised by all,
Till the end of the world.

"It is with irresistible force,
And can pierce through all rigid mountains.
In all the centuries to come,
It will be the undying treasure.

① Sear Spear: Sear, Kirgiz language, it is the magical all-conquering spear with its handle painted by five colour paint, it is the appropriative spear for Manas.

"The crescent battle-ax will be made of clean steel,
I will forge and polish it carefully.
The handle should be twined with tin wire,
To avoid it from breaking.

"The edge of the ax should be soaked in venom,
No matter who is hewed by the ax,
The wound will never heal up,
And even will become worse.
There is no chance for the person,
Who is hewed down by the ax to be alive.

"This job is too hard,
So many smiths will die from this.

"To make a bellows——
Countless bulls will be butchered;
To fire the charcoal——
Several forests should be cut down;
To quench——
Water from several lakes will be used up.

"I will make the ax handle from honeysuckle,
And wrap it with elephant skin.
The ax will shine the light of sky,
On the way of going battle,
Our hero will tie it to the saddle.

"The ax edge is infinitely sharp,
Head of ax is like battle-hammer,
One weapon, two purposes,
This is the famous crescent battle-ax.
And the ax I will forge.

"I will forge another ax,
It is an ax to stand up against spears,
It can be hung on the waistband in normal times,

Small and exquisite like an accessory.

"I will also make a helmet,
The material will be a kind of special copper,
It will be more solid than nine-layer normal helmet.
It is durable but not heavy,
When the hero wear it,
He will feel no weight on his head.

"The netlike armour,
Leather coat and cuirass,
Are not important to our hero.
The warrior wrapped all over by sheet iron,
Will be laughed at by others.

"Akberita has sent his servant,
To ask Budayk for battle gown,
Budayk must present it outright.

"Akerlbok① battle gown fits our hero well,
I need repair carefully the worn place,
Sew it well,
And make it new,
With putting more velvet in it.

"Decorate the brim with gold,
Knit a net with silk thread as a cover.
Put a layer of steel dust in interlining,
The steel dust need be chosen carefully.

"A layer of white velvet,
A layer of white cotton,
A layer of white fine wool,
Add the steel dust in them.

① Akerlbok: Kirgiz language, means white battle gown.

"In order to add the nobleness of the gown,
I will put gold sand in it to make it more shinning.
Sabre can not cut it apart,
Spear can not pierce it through.

"After such craftwork,
It can not be burned even in fire.
I know it is magical,
Bullets of Baran gun can not shoot it through,
Arrow can not pierce it,
Edge of knife will be rolled when it was cut.
The light and suitable Gown Akerlbok,
Will be right for our hero.

"Where is the steel I need,
Only I know it.

"We dig Kelbot clay,
From Kebzit mountain,
To construct the blast furnace.
Wulum ore used to make iron,
Is from Arat mountain.
Krim ore used to make steel,
Is from remote Kelmait moutain.

"We will make all these ready,
In old forest in Samurhan,
To construct the site for making iron and steel.

"To fulfill this task,
We need spend large amount of gold and silver,
Need countless livestock.
Need strong young men,
Need butcher many horses,
Need camels with packs,
Need a great lot ropes and sacks.

"It is easy to say,
But very hard to do.
All the things I need must be well prepared,
But who can provide so much money and so many persons?

"Manas is nine years old this year,
Before he gets eleven years old,
I will make all weapons he need ready,
Within two years.

"The mountains Arat and Kelmait,
Are the producing area of red clay,
I, Bolicbye will go and look for it,
With my sons through thick and thin."

Bolicbye said in one breath,
Then stood up and stretched his arms.
Grey beard waved in the breeze,
Bakay raised his head,
Gave himself great airs.

Then Bakay said in this way:
"I stock great amount of gold and silver underground,
I have countless livestock on the prairie.
No matter how many livestock,
How much money we need spend,
Bolicbye, I will never stint them."

Koshaoyi continued,
And talked with his heart:
"Offspring of Onuzdo,
Expelled by Karamark to anywhere,
We suffer great disaster.

"Banus, Duohan and Arokai,
Even Aoronko,
All came and invaded before.

After the continuous fighting,
They did not defeat us,
So they called me Giant Koshaoyi,
And called people here ' Karid Kirgiz '.

" The name ' Karid Kirgiz ' was forgotten gradually,
Kirgiz in my tribe then,
Was called ' Kara Kirgiz '.
All these are not what we call ourselves,
But the names Karamark imposed on us.

" Throughout the ages,
We live in Atbarsh peacefully,
We were never interrupted by the outside world.
Arpa, Jaz and Aksai which belonged to Kara Kirgiz,
Are fertile and vast.
Forage grass was rich and livestock were all over the pasture,
We Kara Kirgiz,
Had enough to eat and wear.

" Now I will provide a strong male camel,
With good packs for each one,
And four ropes,
And four sacks for each.
Put every three camels in a group,
To let a male servant to lead.

" Six thousand two-humped camels,
One thousand single-humped camels,
Totally seven thousand camels;
Ropes for tying, sacks for loading,
Horses and all kinds of food,
Will be all supplied by me.
They will not go without your order,
They will always wait for your commands.

" Well-beloved Bolicbye,

I would rather sacrifice myself,
To help you fulfill your task.
Kirgiz are destitute and homeless,
I even cry in my dreams about this,
It has always been my sore point.

"Please say the place clearly,
I can help you look for them."

Bolicbye continued their talk:
"Koshaoyi, my dear master,
Please listen carefully:
I will send Tulic to go with you,
Just ask you to provide the camels.

"The saying goes 'we should prepare the bags for holding the milk,
Rather than looking for the mare to milk.'
Tulic, Kelbot clay,
Is rich in store high up on Oboler moutain,
You should go there as quickly as you can,
Without any delay.

"Seven thousand camels have been ready,
You should make the clay,
Back to the forest in Samurhan as soon as possible."

Garmgirchy expressed his opinion,
After Bolicbye:
"Karamark behaved unscrupulously,
And made Kirgiz in misery.

" 'The person put the brick should get it first,
And the person put the stone also should get the stone first.'
This is an old instruction,
It has gone down from generation to generation.

"For Manas' great cause,

For miserable Kirgiz,
We do not need to invite people from other tribes,
Kirgiz, ourselves to act is enough.

"People under Shihay and my reign,
Are only Kirgiz,
I will send ten thousand elites to set out right now,
And take all the food with them.

"If the extremely vicious Karamark,
Come and invade,
I will fight them out.
Bolicbye, please tell me,
Where should we go to gather?"

Bolicbye felt wild with joy,
All his worries went away,
He talked his heart happily:

"Do not disturb all the people,
Just choose very carefully from that ten thousand,
For only fifty people,
And let them take the gold and silver all they need.

"On Oboler mountain,
On Kebzit mountain,
A lot Kirgiz live there.
We can hire workers there,
Only three days are enough to finish.

"Kelbot clay,
Is under Kelmait mountain,
I have ever seen it exactly by myself.

"Deep under the ground,
There are plenty red gold sand and red copper sand.
Kemarkliz is the quality ore to make sharp,

When Koshaoyi's camels get there,
Let these ten thousand camels take once,
That is enough for us.

"You said you will send people and also go in person,
In Arat basin,
On a protrudent mountain ridge,
There are rich Wurum ore.

"You take one thousand camels and one thousand people,
To go there in person.
My son Tolic is here,
Garmgirchy,
I will send him to go with you.

"Kelbot clay and Kelma,
Tolic knows clearly where they are.
It is so important,
That I want to know whether you can go together or not?

"If we have no hero to depend on,
Will vicious Karamark,
Come and disturb any time?
That is what I worry about.

"If giant Koshaoyi go in person,
We will be perfectly safe.
Ten thousand camels can make it successful one time,
Five thousand camels carry ores,
Another five thousand carry fireclay.
There will be less hardship on the way."

Giant Koshaoyi accepted the advice,
He was ready to go together.
All others felt ease about his decision,
Bolicbye added:
"Please let Bakay stay with us,

Garmgirchy,
All the people you will send out,
Please let me command them.

"I will ask them to dig a very very big pit,
Make a good expansion around it,
Put the pit full of the dry firewood,
And let it burn day and night.
And pile the charcoal,
Higher than the top of the mountain.

"I will dig the turf from the marsh,
And dry it in the sun as fuel.
I will ask them to dig deep underground,
To get the coal.

"I will ask those strong men,
And brave warriors,
To forge the iron and steel.
I will make the earth become the sea of fire,
Let the furnace shine brightly,
Let the liquid iron run like milk.
I will make the weapons for our hero,
Let the vicious enemies,
See our power."

In the forest in Samurhan,
On the top of the cloud-kissing furnace,
Fire surged to the sky,
Ore in the furnace,
Had melted in red and was like the river.

Bolicbye stood still,
Observed the flame on the top,
And said to Bakay excitedly:
"The ore is as red as blood,
On the top of the furnace is the purple flame.

Bakay, please watch carefully,
Red flame is becoming to white now.

"When the purple flame,
Dims and disappears,
Watch carefully then,
The surface layer of liquid iron is floating like creme.

"The red running liquid is on the bottom,
In the middle, three colours,
White, yellow and purple come together,
Then it is the running steel.

"We will pour the liquid steel into the water,
Then pull the clean steel out;
The surface of the steel,
Will always be shinning.

"In this way, the steel will be bent,
But will never be broken,
It can cut the rock into half.
Blood fails to stand on it,
And there will be no rust on it,
Even it is buried underground for four hundred days."

He pointed out the three changes to Bakay,
Then asked others to put out the fire.
"Do not let wind blow in!"
He asked to close the door of the furnace.
Then opened it after forty days,
Made the liquid curdled to three layers.

Bolicbye smiled at this moment,
"Just like flying into the sky,
The steel I forge has been finished,
The top layer is,
Krim, Wulum and Kockarl Steel,

It has been in shape.

"The firelock and Achalbaris Sword,
The long spear and the crescent ax,
I will use the best steel to forge them.
Kockarl steel in the middle layer,
Is used to forge our hero's armour.
This steel is hard to find in the world,
My wishes have been accomplished,
All the things will be fulfilled perfectly.

"The bottom layer is,
The metal mixed by copper and lead,
Valuable Ackelat firelock,
And bullets will be made by it.

"Fierce tiger Manas,
Bakay, my bosom friend,
I am fortunate enough today,
To have all my desires fulfilled.

"Let the cloud of misery,
Float to our enemies.
Tomorrow will be the day of full moon,
And it is Monday of Genesis,
It is the best day for us to begin."

When Garmgirchy got up the next morning,
It was the time of dawn prayer,
He asked servants to pour oil into the wok,
To butcher fat horses,
In order to make weapons for Manas,
They made themselves busy with it.

The lame craftsman Bolicbye,
His workshop had five storeys.
No one dare have a look at his workshop,

Except his workers.

Stepped thick boards under their feet,
Held long thread for chalking lines in hands,
Four workers sweated profusely,
They were too busy with their work.
Bolicbye forged the sword first.

Eight strong men swung big hammers,
Eight youth swung small hammers,
When hammers fell on the iron sheet,
Sparks slopped,
And sound was loud,
The steel was dancing in flames,
Big sound did not stop.

Hammers and iron sheet met together,
Sweat dropped down as bright as pearls.
A waist-deep pit was stepped out from the ground,
Underground water had filled it full.
After one-week busy work,
The valuable sword was forged.

A big pit was dug,
Beside the spring,
They smeared a thick layer,
Of pure horse grease.
They put the sword into the shady pit,
Warded the sunshine off,
For seven days.

They melted the fish oil,
Collected large amount of snake gallbladders,
And smeared them on the sword.
Put a piece of smoked felt,
On the sword carefully,
And put the sword under the shadow for another seven days.

They unfolded the felt and took out the sword,
No one saw it except the smiths,
They plated the gold powder,
Carefully on the sword.
They made six chains,
With pure gold.
And tied them on the sword.

Squeezed out the juice of wild onion and wild garlic,
Stirred it with the juice of endive and heated it up,
Then put the sword into the mixed juice.

When the sword was taken out from the juice,
The sharp of the sword was as red as the fire,
It was bright and shining.

The sheath of the sword was made of red gold,
Handle of the sword was beset with yellow gold.
The cramp ring of the handle was made of silver,
All parts were exquisitely carved.

The sword was only seven spans long when it was in sheath;
It became to forty spans long when it was taken out.

With thick brand, sharp edge,
Curved point, straight brand,
The sword was shining in the sunshine.
Waved it,
It looked like the fire.

The clever young hero,
Held the sword tightly in his hand.
He looked around and looked for the object,
A big tree could encircle by four persons,
Jumped into his eyes.

Hero Manas, at that moment,

His mind was filled with a myriad thoughts and ideas.

"The trunk is the master, leaves are soldiers,
Whether I can cut down the tree or not,
It depends on my strength.
If I can not cut it down,
It means I do not have enough strength."

He took out the sword,
Chopped at the tree at full tilt,
But the tree did not budge an inch,
Majik knew the secret of it clearly.

Majik caught hold of a withe,
Waved it slightly,
The tree shook by itself,
Then toppled down to the ground.
Manas was overjoyed,
And praised the sword was too sharp.

"Warrior, try it by yourself!"
Manas passed the sword to Majik.
Majik took the sword,
And bent the point to the brand.
The sword could be bent easily,
Like a soft withe,
Then it returned to normal straight,
It was convenient to fold.

Bolicbye's words,
Were all coming true one by one.
The young hero tested,
And found the sword was just the one he wanted.

"I must fulfill my promise."
The spear was made of clear steel with a sharp point,
Mixed the venom of mosquitoes,

With the urine of female boar,
Then quenched and soaked the spear in it.
And made the point of the spear,
Into the shape of wolf's tongue.

All the materials,
Were pure white steel.
The handle of the spear,
Was from the pine in deep forest.
All the metal decorations,
Were all made by pure black steel.

The straight handle,
Was carved out twelve ridges.
Thirty two paints were chosen,
To paint the ridges.

Twined with a layer of the tin wire,
To avoid it sliding down.
Wrapped tightly with the velvet cloth,
To avoid freezing his hand.

Hero's Sear spear,
Would be praised by Arashi people,
Till the end of the world generation after generation.

Gunpoint and gunstock were measured precisely,
Gun barrel was made with a mixture of Kockarl clear steel.
The metal on the gunpoint,
Was the Wulum clear steel.
The rear part,
Was made of Krim clear steel.

Bolicbye forged the firelock elaborately,
He carved whorl inside the guntube,
So the bullets would never turn a corner,
And just go to the object straightly.

The round gunpoint, apple-like gunhead,
The bullets would never miss the target.

Gunpost is the monster, bullet is the killer,
The base is harder than rock.
I will carve screw thread in the barrel of the firelock,
Fixed on a metal base,
It would git the objective far far away.

Gun barrel was in right length,
And was shining.
When the firelock was carried on the back,
It was right in size.

If fire the Ackelat firelock,
The sound was as big as the sound of Koychager.
It could bring you the joy.
It was like local Ochiker cannon if fired casually,
It was like Zanbric fire cannon if fired by heart,
But it was also similar to Sandolen fire cannon.
All the gears and secrets of the magical firelock,
Were instructed by Bolicbye one by one.

Acharlbaris sword, Sear spear,
And Ackelat firelock had already been done.
Bolicbye began to forge the crescent battle-ax,
But the charcoal was not enough,
To go on melting the ore.
Flames dimmed out and only ash was left.

In order to make more charcoal,
They cut more forest.
Four bellows,
Made of eight oxhide separately,
Blew from four directions.
Each of the bellows,
Would be broken after one day's work.

The strong guys forged iron,
Were all completely exhausted.
For the work as the blacksmiths,
So many strong men lost their lives.

Countless oxen were butchered,
To cut down their skin and make the bellows.
Countless lakes were drought,
To quench.

Lame craftsman Bolicbye,
Carved continuously,
Throughout the year,
Worked alone carefully in his room.
Wrapped with tin wire tightly,
To avoid the ax from breaking.

Like what singers sang,
Anyone cut by the crescent ax,
His wound would run with pus,
It was hard to heal.
Anyone who was cut on the head,
Would die only.

The handle was made of fine woodbine,
And wrapped it with the skin of elephant.
Many people tried to lift it,
But all failed to do it,
And tiredness were etched into their faces.
On the way of battle,
Brave Aji Bayi,
Could only put the ax beside the saddle narrowly.
The crescent ax was made in a year,
It was another excellent work of Bolicbye.

Bolicbye chose out sixty male goats carefully,
And asked to butcher all them.
Put the goats into hot water to pluck the hair out,

He cut the goat skin into slim pieces.
Twisted the pieces into leather rope,
Made a leather tail at the end of the rope.
Once such a long leather lash cracked,
The ringing sound made the enemies terribly frightened.

There were red tassels on the end of the lash,
The handle of the lash was solid and massive.
To revenge on the enemy,
Made the handle with woodbine.
And drilled some small holes,
On the handle.

Abushka① had a black calf,
A strong calf ate two cows milk every day,
Made the white leather strip with the calf skin,
Then put in the holes on the handle,
And gave it to the hero.

All weapons were equipped,
Kirgiz were all generous,
And donated countless gold and silver.

Garmgirchy and Shihay's workers,
All were working hard,
Five thousand workers worked together.
Koshaoyi's workers and camels,
Carried large amount of ore,
Gold, silver, steel and iron,
Tin and lead,
Even coal and red earth,
For the whole year without rest.

Bakay offered too much gold, silver and jewelry,
And countless livestock,

① Abushka: It means the elders here.

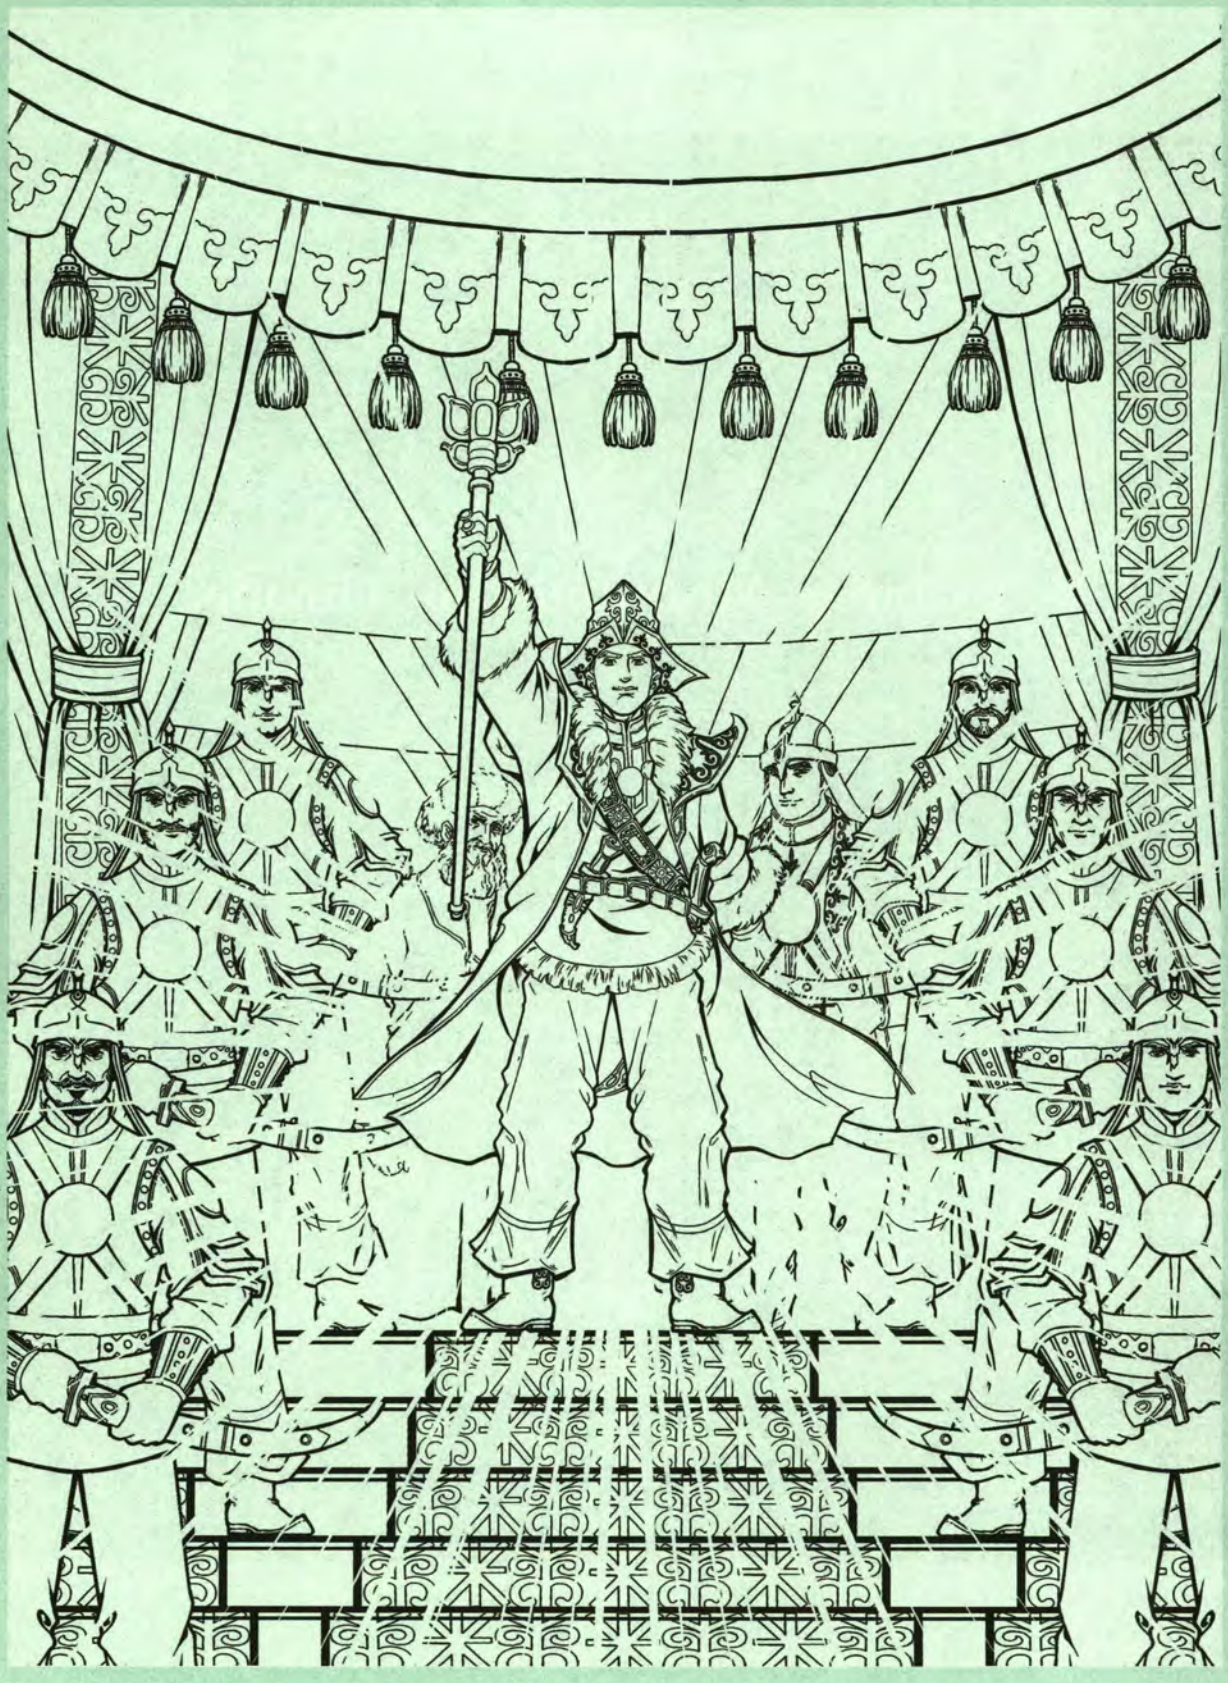
If measured by gold,
All these offers were more than two hundred thousand Liang.
And these were not all the cost,
There was still the cost of the battle gown.

If there was no battle gown,
Enemies' bullets would shoot the hero.
Warriors believed Budayk Khan,
Would present the battle gown to them.

Let us go back to Altay,
To talk about Berita.
And listen how the black mane wolf① Manas,
Was elected to the king.

① Black mane wolf: Black mane wolf, lion, leopard and some other names, are all used to describe the braveness of Manas by the singers and folk people, they are the special names for Manas, And they also can be used to describe other heroes, readers can judge from the contents.

Manas Mounted the Throne



Manas' Forty Warriors

"Kirgiz has made well preparation in south,
All Kirgiz must take part in,
No exception."
Akberita made the preparation in secret,
Without any rest.

In late autumn the year before,
Beside Arilkoler lake,
He butchered sixty mares to treat his guests,
Sent sixty messengers to invite,
Kirgiz leaders and rich men day and night,
He ordered the messengers that:
"All the brainy youths,
And all persons who can mount a horse,
Should prepare in secret,
Do not let Karamark notice it."

He invited the Karamark leaders,
Presented a costly banquet.
He provided thousands of livestock,
To praise the winner on the arena.
Kirgiz and Karamark stood on both sides,
Began the games of wrestling and horse racing.

Those self-glorifying youths,
Rushed into the arena and began the competition.
The great ceremony Berita held,
Continued for whole six days.

People went back after the ceremony,
Only some wisdom elders left,
And sent servants to observe outside.

The guests invited were,
Jagurp Bayi, Onuzdo's oldest son,
Kapchaque Bayi from Kelkoler lake.
Kazakh leader Aydarhan,
And many celebrated rich men.

Kulitan and Kurdacy,
And a bunch of friends with common ideals and goals,
Led by Aelman,
Did not come and attend the ceremony.

After all people came and gathered,
Giant Berita began his talk:
"In my father, Onuzdo's reign,
There were ninety thousand households,
We lived peacefully as a big family.

"After my worshipful father king died,
Karamark forcibly occupied our field,
We lost our homeland and wandered here and there.
Damned Karamark,
Did all manner of evil,
They cut the bellies of pregnant women open,
We were expelled out of our homeland,
And roved in distance.

"We have waited until our expected hero came to us,
All Kirgiz's good fortune has come.
We wish he has a long life and a head harder than the stone,
We will get our dignity back soon.

"We must take good care of our own livestock,
Do not let oxen moo and horses neigh,

Do not startle Karamark around us.

"Do not let male camels run wildly,
Do not let male goats gore horns,
To avoid the horns from breaking.
You'd better castrate all the male livestock,
And get ready to move.

"When winter comes,
I will conjure a heavy snow;
To cover Altay and Yili,
And areas beside Kunse and Tex.

"I will let the people live here,
Suffer great snow disaster.
I will make damned Karamark,
Leave our homeland,
Because of the snow disaster.

"If all of you at presence agree with me,
In next early spring,
When the livestock become fat,
You should begin to move.

"Go forward along Arat mountain,
Both sides of the mountain,
Can be the pasture.
Climb over Bayisoren and Barikart mountain,
Atbarsh is over there.

"You can take the pasture along the mountain slope,
And echo from afar with Kara Kirgiz.

"Please do not give your heart completely to,
The fertile and rich Samurhan.
Please do not have fond dream,
And do not make troubles,

Just do things according the rules.

"Jagurp Bayi, you have moved many times,
Have suffered a lot.
You ever wandered to Kunse,
Then roamed to Tex prairie.

"You nomadised in vast area of north mountain,
And also lived Aktokoy forest once,
Lost countless livestock.
You renamed there 'Bulunto sea',
This is one of your great achievements.

"You also hid in Balikun one time,
Went to Qingersh's station many times,
And rounded his yurt,
But he only gave you the bubble reputation as Khan.

"Trust me, all the things from now on,
Will be in your charge again,
You will be a real Kirgiz Khan.
Once Manas is safe,
All of us at presence will be in his yurt.

"We can not behave as noisy,
As frogs and sparrows.
We can not act of our own free will,
It will destroy our safety and reputation.

"I have not finished my words,
Please listen to me carefully.
All the heroes at presence,
Are in good reputation of administer your own region.

"All of you have your beloved sons,
Especially me, Berita,
I have a son named Chuwak.

He has no other brothers,
He is my only son.

"For the destiny of all Kirgiz,
Each of us should send one son to the battlefield.
Neither send weak ones,
Nor send ones been cursed,
But choose warriors,
Please consider the fate in the future.

"I will send my son Chuwak,
Twenty followers.
A group of twenty one people,
Whether is it satisfied for you?

"Kapchaque Bayi,
You came from Kelkoler.
Your son Abdeld,
Might be the same age with Chuwak.

"I have met him more than once,
He is clever and acts distinctly,
I do not make it up,
He is actually eloquent and bright.

"People amiably call him Aji Bayi,
It is a praise for him,
We let him be the leader of the group,
Let him become a moderate person,
Please tell me,
What is your opinion?"

Kapchaque Bayi totally agreed with Berita,
He chose out twenty elites,
From Kazakh, Kirgiz people,
From Aridgen, Argen tribes,
And from Wusun people in Altay.

All of them were the offsprings of nobles,
No matter noble or Bigan①,
Every of them was world-famous hero.
The twenty persons had registered,
Were all led by Aji Bayi.

On the foot of Barikart mountain,
A boulevard there,
Could lead to Samurhan.
They fixed the time of departing,
Then left one by one.

One day, boys gathered together,
Talked about their departure,
Berita said in all earnestness:
"Every boy must have ten followers,
Got around him,
And get ready for orders and assignments."

"Black mane wolf Manas,
Has four hundred and eighty warriors around him."
Such words were from here.

Someone led a gray mare,
Cut its neck and blood ran out,
People there roll up their wristbands,
And put their hands into the blood.

They swore with one voice:
"Who does not keep the promise,
He will come to an end like this mare."

They swore with the arrow in their mouth:
"Anyone who breaks the promise,

① Bigan: The leader of Kirgiz tribes was once called "Ari" or "Bi", Bigan is the leader of a tribe or the smallest officer.

Will be punished by arrows and bullets of firelock."
They swore with breaking the branches,
Then mounted the steeds and whipped,
And went away with confidence,
Their vow haunted in their ears for a long time.

Berita could not fall to sleep,
Prepared the packs carefully,
For his only son Chuwak.
He asked the scribe to write the letter.
He took out his valuable seal,
Stamped on the letter clearly.

"Go ahead! My boy, wish you will be successful,
Wish Khuda bless you,
Yumat and Jaysan are your good fellows!"

Berita gave his wishes to his son,
Then sent his only son to set out.
Yumat and Jaysan,
Were at both sides of Chuwak.

With Berita's blessing,
And Berita's letter in his pocket,
Nine years old Chuwak,
Whipped his steed,
And went toward Budayk Khan's domain,
Day and night without rest.

Kazakh Khan Budayk,
From the seventh ancestor till now,
Garrisoned in Aramutu city,
And became the Khan and master there.

Chuwak was sent by Berita,
To ask Budayk for his Akerlbok battle gown.
He carried large amount of gold and silver on his steed,

Two brave young warriors,
Accompanied with Chuwak.

They set out from Altay,
Young Chuwak did not stop for a while,
And did not strike up a conversation with passers-by either,
He kept the secret deep in his heart.

Finally,
He arrived in Alma-Ata successfully.
He took out his father's letter,
And gave it to Khan.

The Khan administered that area,
Was just Budayk.

Khan butchered a mare and treated them warmly,
Asked them to stay a night and went back the next morning,
Budayk asked his servants to take out the lavish gift,
The white battle gown and presented it.

Berita's letter to Budayk,
Explained his wishes clearly and sincerely:
"You are Arashi, I am Arashi,
We are both Arashi.
Karamark's invation,
Made us live in misery.

"Our personal liberty was deprived,
We are living as slaves.
'All Arashi are slaves.'
We carry such shame on the back.

"Budayk, you know clearly,
And I am also clear-headed.
The miserable life of Arashi,
Will change soon.

Our bad situation will converse completely.
Our hero we expected for long had already been born,
And he is eleven years old this year.

"In the forest near Samurhan,
Hero's weapons have already been finished.
It is our almighty Khuda,
Help us fulfill our dreams.

"Sage Bakayi,
Had already met our hero.
Please think about it, wise Budayk Khan,
You will not miss the right chance.

"My only son Chuwak,
I have sent him to visit you.
I think your Akerlbok battle gown,
Should be in best use.

"I asked you for Akerlbok battle gown,
And sent my only son to you.
No matter you agree to present or not,
Please give me a clear answer.

"The battle gown is not for Chuwak,
He is not qualified to the battle gown.
The only one worthy of the gown,
Is our hero Manas.

"When Manas was born,
His Great name was shown in his palm.
I, Berita went there in time,
And changed a new for him at that time."

He told all the things,
To Budayk in detail.

When Budayk finished reading the letter,
He did not show any hesitation,
But smiled a smile of understanding:
"All Berita's words are true,
The Akerlbok battle gown I collected,
Is only worthy for Manas."

Tell everyone the truth,
The Akerlbok battle gown,
Was bought from Buhara by Budayk Khan,
He never showed it off to others for many years.

The Akerlbok battle gown,
Was impossible to find the second one in the world.
For its source, we should see that,
The valuable Akerlbok battle gown,
Was made by the queen of Kara Khan,
The beauty Kanikai's mother,
Stitch by stitch by herself.

Kara Khan, Timirhan and Shatimir,
Were born by the same mother.
Kara Khan's nimble-fingered wife,
Made two battle gowns,
One of the gowns,
Was collected by Kara Khan.
The other one,
Was in Timirhan's hand.

Now the valuable battle gown,
Would be handed over to Chuwak.
The cloth-wrapper in front of Chuwak,
Was with that gown in it.

"Dear boy, please take it,
Put the wrapper only under your head when you sleep.
Neither mention it to anyone,

Nor unfold the wrapper to look at it.

"You can not see it,
Until you go back and meet Manas.
Now that your father wrote a letter in person,
And asked you to come and take the gown,
I will give it to you now,
Without attaching any extravagant hope to it."

Mounted the magical Koctiky① steed,
Tied the battle gown tightly on the saddle,
The nine-year-old boy was awe-inspiring,
With helmet on,
The long iron stick was in his hand,
Layers of armour was on,
He was severe-looking.

Nine-year-old hero Chuwak,
Was as strong as a big mountain.
The fine steed Koctiky's tail,
Waved in the wind.
The two boys Yumat and Jaysan,
Were followed by him all the time.

They set out from Alma-Ata,
To the direction of Barikart.
They met Aja Bayi and the followings,
In a place called Samicy.
Aji Bayi, Chuwak,
Totally twenty two people,
Went forward together.

Kirgiz wandered here and there for long,
They buried the feeling of disappointment and misery deep in their heart.

① Koctiky: The name of Chuwak's horse, it is Kirgiz language, its original meaning was male black and gray goat, Chuwak's horse was in the same color, so they gave the name to his horse.

After Manas came to this world,
They began to gather again.
People expelled by Karamark,
Were ready to move in secret.

Chuwak and Aji Bayi led the group,
Whipped their steeds hard without rest,
They approached the forest hero garrisoned soon,
Chuwak kept the secret along the way.

Hero Manas and giant Bakay,
Heard Chuwak was coming,
They went forward to meet him.

Among the tribes,
Of Kara Karlpark, Jurjit and Juda,
Baran and Shankay,
Karik and Keyba, Tajik and Seardan①,
One person opposed Karamark.

The name of this person was Eriman,
He was wizard,
Divination was his best ability.
He was a very famous rich man,
Among these tribes.
He had only one son,
Called Erchywuler,
Who was also a famous hero.

His brother Kerlgelchal,
Was a hero who had contact with nobody.
Eriman got the information from the fortune book,
And selected wisely twenty persons,
From the children of those rich men and leaders,

① Kara Karlpark, Jurjit, Juda, Baran, Shankay, Karik, Keyba, Tajik and Seardan: These are all the names of Kirgiz tribes.

Formed a crack group,
Kerlgelchal was in this group too.

Because of not bearing Karamark's humiliation,
Kerlgelchal led the group by himself,
To go to Manas for shelter.

The group of Chuwak,
Hunted gazelle on their way,
They shouted and were in great joy.
They whipped their lashes and went fast,
Soon they were closer to Manas.

Heroes Chuwak and Aji Bayi,
Stared at the front,
And found two figures went into their sight,
They were just Manas and Bakay.

The boys dismounted their steeds,
Hung the halters on their steeds' neck,
And greeted Manas and Bakay with great respect.
Then asked each other's name,
And knew the identity of each one.

Before they went on their trip,
Another group led by Kerlgelchal,
Also arrived there.

Sage Bakay, Manas,
Brave hero Chuwak and his group,
Kerlgelchal and his twenty followings,
Finally gathered and they were excited.

The two groups people together,
Were just forty,
Manas' forty warriors,
Were formed by these people.

The twenty warriors led by Chuwak,
Had ten followings for each one,
And the twenty warriors led by Kerlgelchal,
Had ten for each too,
Totally four hundred and eighty persons,
They were in orderly lines.

Garmgirchy arrived on the same day,
They gathered and pitched the camps.
Manas, Bakay, Garmgirchy,
And giant Berita's son Chuwak,
Discussed together on the overall situation.

Kerlgelchal became the leader of the warrior group,
Aji Bayi was Bigan.
Aji Bayi's name gradually simplified,
To "Ajibi".

This name also changed gradually,
Finally Aji Bayi became his real name.
Kirgiz people talked and handed down his heroic deeds,
Which made his name famous forever.

The generous giant Garmgirchy,
Asked to butcher sixty mares,
Four hundred and ninety warriors,
Ate the meat up in a day.

The lame craftsman Bolicbye,
Packed up and was ready to depart.
He refused to take any gold and silver,
He was really a kind and upright craftsman.

He had no other wild wishes,
But pleaded Bakay,
"Please give me a blessing."

He held Manas' hands tightly,
And said to the hero sincerely:
"You are the eyas, I am an old man,
The point of your spear will never rust.
Hero Manas, from now on,
You are the head of our nation.

"The back of your ax will never split,
Such ax is impossible to find a second in the world.
You should unite all the Kirgiz people,
Never let them live in misery again.

"You are fortune to have great warriors gathered,
To have vast pastures.
You should get back the dignity of our nation,
Please act right now."
The smith let go hero's hands,
Made his farewell and set out.

The ox the smith mounted moved sideways,
His two sons went with him together.
"We can not go with our father shoulder to shoulder,
In that way, we will become unfilial children."

They mounted neither horses nor oxen,
But followed his father on foot.
With Tulic and Tolic,
They three went back slowly.

Berita organized the common people,
To move and they have nearly approached.
Between Baysolan and Atbarsh,
Was the Arat peak.
Both the south side and north side were vast pastures,
And people had given up and moved out from the previous village.

Herdsmen still grazed their livestock,

Berita, Jagurp and Kapchaque Bayi,
Led over six thousand people,
Set out toward Samurhan.
People went on their moving journey in succession,
After two days' trip,
They could pitch the camps there.

Manas, Bakay and Garmgirchy,
Arranged all the things well.
The green meadow in Samurhan,
Was dyed to the color of red by livestock's blood.
In order to offer sacrifices to god,
They butchered mares and camels every day.

They separated the weak people from their troops,
Garmgirchy suggested them,
Move toward the direction of Namagan.

"Please go to Namagan and Aush,
You can plough the field and live your life there.
There are pastures and plenty of fresh wild fruits,
They are good places to rest and build up strength,
It is suitable for the poor.

"If you stay here, you will be involved in the bloody war.
You will face unimaginable misery,
In the cruel war."
They decided to evacuate from Samurhan.
People were ready to go to Namagan and Aush,
Would beled by Kerlgelchal.
"You should protect these people,
And lead them safely to Aush and Namagan."

Let's put this page down,
I will sing our hero Manas,
About how he fought Karamark hero Kontoy.

Great Battle between Manas and Kontoy

All strong young men stayed there,
They butchered mares and did training every day.
The coming enemy Kontoy,
Stationed on Belsaz prairie.
The troop led by Berita and Jagurp,
Were also coming and ready to fight.

Onuzdo's great red banner,
Was collected by Jagurp for a long time.
Golden signs were on the banner,
They wrote Manas on the banner.

"You should carry the banner to the battlefield!"
Jagurp gave the banner to Kerlgelchal to carry.
Troops gather from all directions,
Had more than thirty thousand person,
Bustling with activity.

The letter of challenge had sent to Kontoy,
Kontoy assembled his soldiers and was ready to attack.
Karamark got more than sixty thousand soldiers,
With strong soldiers and sturdy horses,
Kirgiz got the information from scouting.

Kontoy held his head high and went to attack,
And left some to stay behind for garrison.
He chose heroes from his troops,
Finally he got ten giants.

Defiant Kontoy,
Led his sixty thousand soldiers,
And went on their fighting journey.

The place two armies threw up defences,
Was on the prairie under Belsaz mountain.
Kockjayk meadow on Kuokoydon,
Was covered by Karamark and Kirgiz.
A noisy crowd on the prairie,
Showed the coming of a severe battle.

Kirgiz tribes,
Were eager to get into the fight,
Like onrushing flood.
They were excited with no fear,
Their hysterical shout,
Was earsplitting.

The elders were all in high spirit,
The youths were all filled with enthusiasm.
Vigorous men of stocky and imposing builds,
Itched to have a go.

The elders mounted the comfortable horses,
With their long white beard flapping in the wind.

Karamark soldiers swarmed forward quickly,
Like beetles overspread the earth.
Bakay, Berita, Garmgirchy,
Who would command the troops?

Jagurp Bayi was of noble character and high prestige,
He began his words first:
" 'A person's behaviour depends on his mind,
A ceremony depends on emcee.'

"If there is no commander,

The troops will be in troubled waters,
It is ridiculous."

"It is true and reasonable!"
The warriors held their halters,
And discussed nervously and carefully,
Then they put Bakay on the seat for Khan.

It was just from that time on,
Bakay became a Khan.
Till now,
He was still talked as the Khan.
Hero Manas was young,
And Bakay Khan commanded overall situation.

Kirgiz and Karamark had accumulated grievances over the years,
The time for revenge had been coming.
All people opened their eyes widely,
One general spurred the horse,
And rushed out from Karamark camp.

He rushed forward bravely.
His name was Tatay,
In Karamark troops,
He was one of the famous generals.
Although he was in Karamark camp,
He was not Karamark people.

He loosened the halter and his horse jumped frantically,
As if it would stamp everything flat.
His silk battle gown,
Was waving and shining in the sunshine.

He grasped the spear tightly,
As proud as a camel,
He was unusual,
Because of his strong figure.

He rushed out of Karamark camp,
With all his strength.

Giant Garmgirchy spurred his steed,
And was going to cut enemies' heads down.
Bakay gave the order to stop him,
He had to hold the halter of his steed.

A warrior called Saimat,
Once surrounded by eighty enemies,
In a fight of plundering the horses,
And he defeated his enemies.
He was a Kazakh warrior,
People usually called him hero Saimat.

"Let me go out to battle!" he came to ask a battle assignment,
In front of Bakay Khan.
His attitude was sincere,
But Bakay had other plan,
And did not think of his request.

Chuwak could not wait anymore,
The nine-year-old hero Chuwak,
Came to ask for battle assignment.
"Wish you win victory in the first battle!"
"Go ahead, my tiger Chuwak."
Berita only could agree,
And gave the order to fight.

The young tiger Chuwak,
Made good preparations,
Mounted Koktiky steed,
He looked bright and brave.
The helmet was tight on his head,
He shouted and rushed to the battlefield.

Although Chuwak was only nine years old,

His shouting was different from the ordinary.
In the time of Manas,
He was always an outstanding valiant general.

Bakay sent him go out to battle first,
In order to let him perform immortal feats.
It was the first battle of Chuwak,
He fought with hero Tatay.

Hero Tatay came on Chuwak's face,
He had already been world-renowned.
He once defeated countless enemies,
Halo of winner circled on his head.

Kirgiz never saw this people before,
According to the heroic story of Tatay,
He was a valiant general.
People lived in west,
Were humiliated by Karamark,
They lost their homes,
Wandered everywhere.
Kontoy could control one place and acted the tyrant,
Tatay was his backing and confederate.

Nine-year-old Chuwak,
Was right facing Tatay.
When Tatay saw Chuwak,
He held the halter and turned round,
And went back to the side of Kontoy,
He was filled with rage and opened his eyes wildly.
He sputtered with full of complaints:
"Kontoy, you are my respectful leader,
It was me, Tatay,
Killed countless enemies in the battlefield.

"Tatay, me, is far-famed,
How can a Kirgiz child on a colt,

Fight with me?

" 'Tatay fights with a child in the battlefield.'
It will bring disgrace to my reputation.
You can send others to go for the battle,
I will go back to my camp."
He talked a lot.

Kirgiz and Karamark lived together,
And herded livestock on the same prairie.
They maintained contacts with each other,
So they could understand,
Each other's daily oral language.

When Chuwak heard Tatay's scornful words,
He felt shamed,
And bursted into anger.

Tatay was too proud to go to the battle,
His hips left the saddle suddenly.
He hung back with full of his energy,
And turned back with great anger.
He spurred the horse,
And turned round to face Chuwak:
"You, damned Brute,
The saying goes that 'the dying goat,
Goes to herdsman's stick deliberately,
And finally loses its life.'
This saying is known by everyone,
You come today just like the goat,
I think you are eager to seek death."

He poured his words out like flood,
With indignant emotion.
He waved the spear in his hands,

Rushed forward fiercely.

Although he never experienced the scene of fighting,
Had no experiences of fighting hand to hand,
The young hero Chuwak,
Was tactical and full of spirit.

He acted as a hero of a hundred fights,
And an ever-triumphant general.
He pushed aside all the coming spears,
Aimed his spear at self-glorifying Tatay,
And stabbed severely.
He made Tatay,
Down on the ground mercilessly.

After seeing this,
A warrior called Kobgan,
Shouted and rushed forward.
It must be death that called him,
He shouted the name of Tatay,
And with anger filled his heart full.

He shouted ceaselessly like a barking dog,
Stabbed his spear to Chuwak's throat.

Hero Chuwak,
Stirred up his full energy.
His courage mounted as the battle progressed,
His spear with red tassel was whirring,
He pushed the coming spear aside,
And stabbed his spear into the chest of his enemy.

How could the person stabbed by Chuwak live in the world,
How could his enemy down on the ground stand up again?
If the enemy fell on his side and sustained by his hand,
Whether Chuwak would spare him?

Two powerful enemies,
Had died quickly,
Fortune of Kirgiz had new hope.

When Kontoy saw the end of his two generals,
He was wild with anger,
He spurred his steed,
And rushed out with his spear in the hand.

All the others were just common warriors,
How could Kontoy bear such failure?
He had to go out to battle in person.
He went out with anger,
Mounted his steed with the shield on his shoulder.

Kontoy rushed out fast and violently,
His legs stirred his steed ceaselessly.
The wolf tongue spear in his hand,
Was made of black steel.
Large amount of heroes died under his spear,
He was really an unbeatable hero.

The shield was made of black steel,
His huge figure,
Was like a black mountain.
He fought with countless strong enemies,
And he won every time.

He rushed on the spears and threw himself into the fight,
And always drank blood mixed with sugar to his heart content.

Kara Ketay and Karamark,
When did they worry about their fates?
Once the danger and disaster came,
Everyone believed Kontoy could save the critical situation.

Kontoy considered himself without equal in the world,

His habit of drinking blood,
Had exposed completely,
It was impossible for him to put a child in his eyes.

He waved his bloody spear,
And threw Chuwak down the steed by his spear.
Kazakh warrior Saimat,
Rushed forward like greased lightning.
He held the halter tightly,
Of Koctiky steed which was ready to escape.

He threw the halter at Chuwak,
Then turned and rushed to Karamark for fighting.
Kazakh warrior Saimat,
Did not stretch his spear out,
He had already been stabbed by Kontoy's spear.

"Look, this is Kirgiz warrior!"
Then threw Saimat aside.
"Do not waste my time,
Please send the real warrior to fight."

Manas' face turned blue,
With great anger.
He could not control his sage,
Held Sear spear tightly in his hand.

Sear spear was waving in his hand,
He was ready to fight in the battlefield,
He heard Berita's voice at that moment.
Berita stopped Manas,
Bakay and Jagurp Khan,
Garmgirchy and Kerlgelchal,
All listened carefully to Berita.

"My son Chuwak,
Come over to me.

My fellow friends,
You have seen by your own eyes.
I wanted to go for battle by myself,
But Bakay did not allow me to do that.

"He did not give me the chance to fight,
But my son got the permission to go.
Let my son follow Manas a lifetime,
Accompany our hero at the risk of Chuwak's life,
It is the real will of my son.

"After my father king Onuzdo died,
Although we have ten brothers,
We have Arashi people,
When did we have the courage,
To fight Karamark and Kara Ketay?

"For the honour of Arashi,
Manas was born and will bring us good fortune.
We were afraid of Karamark's inspection,
We had to change his name to 'Chanjindy'.
'Manas' will be your forever illustrious name,
Your name had been written on his palm when you were born.

"Now you will go to fight for the first time,
You must win success immediately upon the arrival.
Shout loudly your name 'Manas',
You can be on a matchless journey.

"Go ahead! Manas, go right now!
Wish you speedy success.
The time of finishing our sufferings will come soon,
You should fight and kill our enemies mercilessly and bravely!"

The generals raised their hands and gave wishes,
Then gazed after Manas's going to the battlefield.
The hero was of awe-inspiring appearance,

The enemies were thrown into panic.

You should listen carefully on the then situation,
If you are absent-minded,
You should step aside like a deaf.
Great hero Manas,
His characteristic was as shining as stars,
We should remember it forever.

Seeing the great brave figure of tiger Manas,
In the battlefield,
Generals all exclaimed with admiration:
A nine years old wonder child,
With a red nevus shining on his forehead,
Ran on his bare feet,
As fast as flying,
And held the halter in his hand.

Below hero's two stirrups,
There were two gray magical rabbits,
With their eyes standing up,
They followed the hero and ran fast.
Their running gestures,
Were affecting and attractive.

When Kirgiz saw this situation,
They all prayed in secret,
And read silently the name of god Babiding in their mouths.

Two fierce tigers with red spots on their bodies,
Ran beside both sides of hero's steed.
Any enemy would not be alive at the seeing of tigers,
But they were royal fellows of Manas.

The more magical thing,
Should be mention here:
As strong as a big bunch of achnatherum splendens,

A huge boa squirmed forward.

As seeing the boa,
No one could control his fear,
A lot of people,
Even urinated in their pants.

Manas' steed Arckura,
Had the sensitive ears moving as the flame of candle.
Its forehead showed the luck,
Its four legs went as fast as wind.

The hip of Arckura steed,
Was touched by Kanbar sage,
His finger marks were left on its hip.

On the saddle of Ayikoler①,
A godess was standing behind the hero,
She wore the Shekoly hat②,
All Arashi were surprised on her beauty.

The jewelry on her head was very rare,
It shone out with great brilliancy.
Watch from the front side across the jewelry,
Her hat was clear to see,
The helmet of the hero was bright enough.

The enchanting and charming girl,
Was in perfect figure,
People watched and praised:
"Let us feast our eyes,
We really hope she can come again."

Sixty male argali were separated into two groups,

① Ayikoler: Kirgiz language, its original meaning was the bright lake like moon. The meaning extended as a person with great ambition. Here it uses to indicate Manas, it is the name of Manas.

② Shekoly hat: A high peaked hat Kirgiz girls wear.

And stood right on both sides of the steed,
Went forward with the hero.
The clops of Arckura steed,
Were as cloud as the clops of sixty steeds,
Such grand scene was inspiring for everyone.

Generals watched aside,
The elders cried the front of their clothes wet,
No one could conceal their excite.
Soldiers were all too excitement,
To express their feeling deep in their hearts.

Clever and agile young people,
Came and faced Bakay and Jagurp,
Stood in front of Berita and Garmgirchy.
They made deep bows to those white-beard elders,
They played Kumuz,
And sang the ode for the hero.

Erchy expressed his feeling with his song,
He won camels with back bags,
Won the steeds with saddles.
His ode with good wishes,
Made a person presented his silk gown on the ground,
Heavy reward money shone as gold.

He was happy and waved his head,
And more excited with the reward money,
He could not conceal his great joy.
His eyes looked around and around,
He wore the fine silver waist band.

Black mane wolf Manas spurred his steed out,
His face shone as the sun.
The generals looked at the hero's back,
Praised loudly Ayikoler lion.

Look from his back,
He was as strong as a white tiger.
Observe from the front,
He was as powerful as a dragon.
Watch down from his head,
He had the brilliance of Aripkara magical bird.
If he shouted,
The sound would be louder than that of forty one lions shouted together.

The lion came from Kirgiz,
His appearance was like this.

When he rushed to the battlefield,
Someone prayed for him with yellow-head livestock,
Someone prayed for him with sheep,
And someone praised his braveness with violet horse.

People had different words on it,
White-beard elders had the common agreement.
Sat on Arckura steed,
The hero felt comfortable.
He left for battlefield,
Like Arato mountain,
His figure was as mighty as Oboler mountain.

Powerful enemy and the hero fought hand to hand,
The earth trembled and the mountains swayed,
Kontoy shouted "Kangayi[①]!"
All people watched aside felt chilled with fear.

The hero rushed forward for fighting,
Arckura steed under the hero jumped ceaselessly.
Behind Arckura,
The dust could cover the sky ascended.

① Kangayi: It indicates the name of mountain , sometimes it also indicates the name of a region or a tribe, it has many meanings.

The hero waved his spear and rushed to the battlefield,
The fly-like life was wondering,
Like a thin horse mane.
They waved their long spears,
Rushed toward the direction of each other,
And fought fiercely.

Brave Manas came from Kirgiz,
Kontoy was from Karamark.
They fought each other fiercely,
The strong situation carried everyone away.

The shield was broken into pieces,
And armours were torn up.
The heart-stirring fighting,
Was going on.

They came out even,
Then they turned the steeds' heads and fought again,
With their bloody spears tight in their hands,
And stabbed directly to each other's heart.

They fought at close quarters,
How can escape from their deadly spears?
But they were not stabbed by each other,
Everyone praised their skills.

Kontoy considered secretly:
"Layers of battle armours,
Are worn on me;
Nothing can pierce them through,
All-conquering spear is in my hand.

"Everything can be split up,
The sharp knife is in my sheath;
It never rebounds when it cut the rock,
Hard rock can be split into half,

And the sharp crescent ax is hanging in my waist.

"High mountain can be smashed,
Sand can be shook away,
Such hammer is under my hip.
It never feels thirsty,
And it never feels tired when it runs,
The famous steed is just under me.
I also have the famous name of General Kontoy,
All these are the promise of my victory.

"A nobody unworthy of mentioning,
He is so small,
Just around ten years old,
He still has the smell of the baby.

"I will stab him to death mercilessly,
Let his blood and night soil flow together,
Cut his belly open and die in the battlefield.
It is a waste of my time to fight with him,
And it will be undignified to me."

He was confident after experiencing battlefield for a long time,
This boar behaved with unbearable insolence.
All his viciousness was shown on his face,
Just like black clouds in the sky.

"I will spurt out the venom,
Like the viper, scorpion and toxic spider.
If I do not stab him down his steed,
My illustrious name Kontoy will be wiped out in a day."
Kontoy stamped with rage and screamed,
Then turned his steed head round.

Seeing the figures of Karamark,
Facing the specter of death,
Manas rushed forward without any fear.

All divinities clustered round him,
Followed Manas tightly.

"I must stab him down the horse!"
Our great lion dashed ahead regardless of his safety,
None could withstand his onslaught,
The haze leapt up behind him.

The magical steed Arckura,
Was going at lightning speed.
Its beautiful mane and long tail were waving in the wind,
Its breast was as strong as that of argali.

The shouting from Manas was flying over in the sky,
The young Manas dashed forward.

Heard the big name of Manas,
Giant Kontoy was frightened out of his wits.
Coming Kontoy issued his challenge to battle,
But his spear was fetched down by Manas immediately.

Manas attacked from the side,
And held the halter of steed Arckura.
He seized the right time,
And stabbed his spear toward Kontoy's rib,
Kontoy's body shook and fell down the horse.

As soon as the young hero,
Went into the battle for the first time,
He stabbed famous Kontoy down the steed.

Kontoy's forces became a scene of chaos,
Everyone's heart almost stood still with fright.
Without the their commander in chief and the command,
Some soldiers escaped right away.

Many generals of Kontoy,

Did not dare to go forward,
After seeing black mane wolf's power and braveness.
The heroes put on airs before,
Now all retracted their heads into their collars.

Self-glorifying Karamark people,
Lost their dignity and prestige.
Without their commander in chief,
Karamark felt quite helpless and were driven to the last ditch.

Jagurp's son Sirak,
Was quick in temper;
He was two years younger than Manas,
And was only half day younger than Sirk.
Sirak and Sirk,
Were twins.

Sirak had a generous disposition,
No matter who the guest was,
He always butchered livestock to treat them generously.
He had put Jagurp's control behind himself,
He still went his own way.

Every time the house was full of guests,
It was not enough to butcher fifty mares.
Jagurp knew some of his behaviours,
And some of his actions showed the wisdom.
Qierdy knew her son was of great natural endowments,
But Jagurp did not understand his son.

Sirak felt sick slightly,
He would rest at home for one or two days,
Qierdy was as restless,
As ants on a hot pan.
Sirak was not her own son,
But Qierdy treated him as her own flesh and blood.
Praying for the healthy growth of Sirak,

Was her only wish.

"I hope he can be the capable assistant of Manas,
Let the enemies come to invade,
Feel regretful for their actions."
Qierdy redoubled her loving care of Sirak,
In the hope of this.

The black mane wolf was eleven years old,
Sirak was just nine years old.
His dark maroon steed Tilkezler①,
Would be five years old next year.
This magical colt,
Followed Sirak like his shadow,
The name of "Tilkezler",
Was handed down generation after generation.

When Sirak was seven years old,
Jagurp bought the colt with large amount of money,
From Jildez prairie in Kunse.
It was not from Jagurp's horses,
It was not born by the studhorse of Kirgiz,
It came from Karamark with shining saddle,
And it then never went back.

Sirak, a boy out of ordinary,
Whispered to each other around him.
Berita's son Chuwak and others,
Turned the heads of their steeds,
And they planned to attack from the other side of Karamark,
This was their brilliant scheme.

When they made everything prepared,
And was ready to shout the name of "Manas!",

① Tilkezler: Kirgiz language, it means purplish red, it is used to refer to the name of Sirak's steed.

To another round of attack,
Berita read out their idea:

"I wish Jagurp and Garmgirchy,
Do not find out the boys' secret,
They will stop the boys if they find their secret,
It will blow the boys' enthusiasm.
If their enthusiasm get a blow,
Just like flame was put out in the ash."

Berita thought again and again,
Then he decided to support the boys.
He pulled the halter and turned his steed,
And observed carefully the boys' actions.

A loud shout came around suddenly,
People's face turned yellow like withered grass,
When they heard the breath-taking shout.
They did not dare to open their mouths,
Like the end of world came.

The shouting made them hair-raising,
Many of their eardrums were vibrated breaking.
The sky became dark,
Just like the dawn came.
The battle drums beat hardly,
Sound of firelocks rose one after another.

Karamark soldiers spoke loudly,
Like crazy hounds.
They dare not go to battle one by one,
Thirty of them went to charge.
Each of them was ferocious,
And as huge as the mountains.

These thirty warriors formed a square array,
They circled Manas,

In the center.
Their shining battle-axes,
Were waved in the wind.
They besieged Manas,
And shouted like the boars.

Karamark soldiers were all wild with joy,
But Arashi people were all worried.
All people held their breath and observed nervously,
The hero shouted for fighting.

Heard the shouts of the hero,
The magical scenes appeared before,
Were in front of all people again.

Karamark soldiers charged with their weapons,
Were utterly routed,
Ten in a pile and five in a group,
Were all stabbed down and went to the hell.

Jagurp's son was so brave,
He rushed forward and made a big fat kill,
He killed ten enemies,
Who came in his face.

Met the battle axes and the points of spears,
Another ten enemies groaned on the ground.
The rest ten warriors,
Fled back to Karamark camp,
Kirgiz heroes followed them tightly.

The two youths Sirak and Chuwak,
Could not helping shouting the name of "Manas",
In the shouting of "Manas!",
They spurred their steeds and chased the enemies.
The elders Berita, Jagurp and so on,
They watched quietly and nervously.

Chuwak charged from the right side,
"He is not a common soldier.
He is a brave youth with both skill and dash,
What kind of disaster will he descend?"
Karamark were all frightened out of their lives.

Sirak charged from the left side,
Like an eagle rushed to a small bird.
He chose strong enemies,
To fight and kill,
No one dare fight with him.

"Everyone is the hero, everyone is the lion,
They are Jagurp's offspring."
All Karamark knew their names,
Cursed them loudly.

Kerlgelchal shouted loudly,
And ordered forty warriors go to battle together.
He mounted his steed,
Held the banner high,
And dashed ahead regardless of his danger.

Twenty heroes led by Aji Bayi,
Twenty warriors led by Erchywuler,
Totally forty warriors went to charge together.
Every of them took ten followings,
Who also spurred their steeds and rushed out bravely.

The grand old man Berita,
Was clearheaded and wise enough,
He counted his brave warriors,
Totally four hundred and eighty warriors,
It was just the right amount.

Berita's son Chuwak,
Spurred his steed and charged in the front;

Kelgelchal and Sirak,
Led the forty warriors and dashed ahead bravely.

Forty all-conquering lions,
Were led by Kelgelchal.
They besieged from all directions,
And stabbed part of Karamark soldiers down,
Just like cutting the weeds.

Forty warriors besieged from four directions,
And circled Karamark in the center.
Ayikoler rushed into enemy's position,
Hero Chuwak followed him tightly,
The two heroes shuttled back and forth in enemy's position.

Sage Bakay gave the general offensive order,
Decidedly as he saw the situation:
"Arashi begin the general offensive now,
Kill our enemies from all directions!

"Berita and Jagurp do not hit out,
Tirkechy and Shihay also should stay,
All others should launch the attack right now.

"Garmgirchy, please listen to me,
There is an escaping path,
On the Budurgu hill ridge,
You must go and garrison there,
Do not let any enemy escape from there.

"Damned enemies must send information,
To Arokai in the south,
To Shawruk in the west,
To Dolias in the middle,
In order to keep themselves alive.

"This is our first time to fight in the battlefield,

We can not let Karamark besiege us,
And make us become the laughingstock of the world.
Hero Manas and warrior Chuwak,
Were two fierce and powerful persons of Kirgiz,
Jagurp's son hero Sirak,
Will never shrink back in front of the formidable enemies."

Heard Bakay's injunction,
Garmgirchy spurred his steed.
He dashed ahead at top speed,
And arrived at Budurgu hill ridge quickly.

Garmgirchy saw a flame rolled in front him,
When he got there.
The tail and the mane,
Of the red steed floated in the air,
Sirak had got there,
Much earlier than him.

Garmgirchy could not help,
Choosing nine fat mares,
And butchered them on the ridge to offer:
"Samurhan sea,
You run the high waves.
We live beside you,
And pray for your blessing all the time.

"Please bestow to hero Manas,
Your width and profundity!
You raise the haze of smoke when your waves are high,
Which scares the enemies,
Please bestow such characters to Manas!

"The floodwater rolls when you are in a violent rage,
Desperate enemies could not stop it.
Please bestow such nature to Sirak!
I will butcher nine mares,

Offer to you as tributes!"

People at that time,
And heroes at that time,
Were all frank and righteous and broad-minded.
Butchered those nine mares,
Without any hesitation,
Garmgirchy prayed for three heroes.

Red blood of the mares,
Ran to Karamark slowly.
The young heroes would go out for a battle,
Got praise from Kirgiz.

Karamark soldiers failed to charge to the hill ridge,
So they escaped down the hill like flood.
But they fled blindly,
And finally lost their chances of escaping,
They had to dismount their steeds to flee.
They fled in any path they could without heeding which they chose,
And prayed for safety at the same time.

Put down their spears,
And laid their banner down on the ground,
Threw their dignity out in the wildness,
And could never get it back.
They came to the face of Kirgiz heroes,
To pray for their lives.
Karamark rushed to Budurgu ridge,
Then tried to flee away,
None of them saved their lives,
And all were killed by Sirak.

Rounded vast salt marsh,
Enemies fled toward lower reaches,
And those Karamark tried to hide,
Were stemmed by Chuwak.

Chuwak fought with heart afire,
How could he let off his enemies?
Enemies who escaped on foot might leave a few alive,
Enemies on the steeds were all killed.

Kontoy's tent,
Was also cleared away by Kirgiz.

The mares were producing milk,
Were all loosened the halters,
The exiled horses went away like wind.
Karamark rich men were all chilled with fear,
Like the lamb tied by rope.

They were expelled and lived with livestock,
They complained to high heaven,
With sloppy clothes and pale faces.
Many of them were tied tightly with ropes,
But no one could resist.

Old ladies and men cried bitter tears,
Begged for their lives in succession with Arashi.
Their previous prestige was swept clean away,
Everyone just curried favour with Kirgiz.
They began to taste the bitter life from that moment on,
Like what Kirgiz experienced before.

People gathered together from all directions,
Kuokoydon prairie was a sea of people.
The young hero Manas,
Had forgotten everything,
Except kill the enemies.
He began to watch around,
When his boiled blood calmed down.

"The noises from people and horses,
Are thunderous to the ears,

What happened on earth?"
Manas asked.

Berita told him:
"Dear boy, in my eyes,
You own the noble spirit,
You are the support and lucky star,
Of sixty tribes' Arashi.

"You are an eternal bright lamp,
You will light Kirgiz future up.
Let our damned enemies cry aloud,
Why do you ask about it?
Your people has begun to get rid of their bad fortune.

"Karamark acted recklessly before,
No matter what they asked for we must present with both hands.
Let us drive piles on the ground,
Tie the horses on the poles,
So that they could eat the mares at any time they wanted.
They asked us to drive all five-year-old horses to them,
And can not make the horses lost any weight on the way,
These damned bastards humiliated us like this in the past.
Look at them now,
Everyone is worried about their life.
They come and beg forgiveness,
But their poor faces still make us feel hateful."

The black mane wolf heard this,
He said in all earnestness,
Like black camel carried heavy packs:
"My uncle,
Please never think in this way.
Persons forcibly occupied others' property——
Were those muddle-headed kings.
Persons brought disasters to our people——
Were also those kings on the throne.

"How can you put the responsibilities of these crimes,
On those harmless and innocent common people.
As long as the leader gave the order,
Not only the livestock,
Even his own children should be presented.

"Put Karamark aside,
All our sufferings,
Should also be thought carefully!
If some know-nothing behave recklessly,
Wise Berita and Garmgirchy,
Should stop them.

"You do the same thing with those children,
It seems all of you enjoy doing that,
You even rush on to expel Karamark horses and sheep.
You elders participate in plunder the livestock,
What benefit do you enjoy?
You are not like respectful elders.

"Kill their leaders,
Do not let off common people either.
It will destroy my reputation if all people know that,
How can such action be written into history?

"Let them stay at their former places,
Do not scramble for spoils of war,
Please stop, Kirgiz!"
Young Manas said such words.

"What you said is reasonable!"
Bakay showed happy smile.

"What does it mean on earth?"
Berita, Garmgirchy,
Jagurp, Shihay and Tirkechy,
Were all confused and could not understand.

Their eyebrows knit in a frown,
Put their heads together and spoke in a whisper.
Stroke their sparse beard,
They held the halters and turned their horses round.

Sharp-witted Sirak,
Spurred his steed and came forward,
When he heard the hero's word,
The hem of his battle gown waved with the wind,
He was excited on what Manas said.

Manas gave them the order:
"Karamark brothers,
You can still herd the livestock on your prairie,
And do not need to move.
Tie your mares to the poles,
And make your mare milk wine at ease!"

Sirak executed the order immediately,
Given by Manas,
Karamark whose yurts were dismantled,
Were in great delights,
And went around spreading the news,
Praised Manas with one voice:
"He is worthy of the name of Manas,
He is wise and intelligent,
And he is fair-and-square.

"Let those talentless guys go to hell!
Manas is the real commander in chief and chairman.
In the near future,
He must be a Khan and support by all the people.

"His expressions and look today,
Has shown the demeanour of a king.
What did common people do wrong?
Why should we share the deviltry with the generals?

"Those damned Khans gave the orders,
How could we disobey their orders?
Manas makes us sincerely convinced,
He is like the bright moon."

They talked endlessly,
And stepped into their yurts.
They need milk wine to quench their thirst,
All the milk was finished,
Then they went to ask for more milk from neighbours.
Everyone talked about Manas:
"It's not a disaster, but a lucky star!"

Ayikoler spurred his steed,
Led Arashi people to dash ahead.
Forty warriors led by Kelgelchal,
Galloped to three directions.
"Station on the high mountain,
To monitor them.

"Whether they live within their bounds,
Please send the information in time.
If anyone flees away, do not stop him,
Do not bother about those who live there.

"Do not drink the wine they give you,
Do not live in their herd village.
Do not let them find your trace,
Do not even expose your intention,
You should watch their actions in secret.

"Whether they understand our kindness,
Or just pack and move,
Their evil nature will be exposed."
The hero gave the order,
And then sent out forty warriors.

Jagurp stationed in the herd village,
Without getting any horse and spoils of war,
He felt resentful and full of complaints:
" 'Please give me some spoils of war!'
If villagers ask for me,
I can give them some,
It will a rise to my fame.

"Now it made me lost face,
Do not let me touch even the halter of a horse,
My fame will be destroyed.

"I raise such an unfilial son,
He is always extravagant at his pleasure,
He ravaged countless livestock of mine.

"He does not accept his position in life,
He killed Karamark warrior Dudar,
It made me in great terror.
Karamark came and trampled on my herd village,
Dust swirled in the air.

"Could it be said that we have no heroes,
How could we let Kelgelchal, a person from Tukuman,
Led forty warriors,
It shames us Kirgiz.

"Sirk and Sirak are too young,
Sirak helps me with my horses.
He does not let anyone take even a piece of bran,
Does not let anyone take a foal away,
He knows a thing or two.

"Sirk is an iron-hearted person,
He takes care of,
All cloven-hoofed animals and sixty yurts.

"The boys kept their mind on managing livestock,
But they were deluded by Kelgelchal,
And followed him to run about here and there,
And to serve Manas.
My dissuasion is useless,
Just like a gust of gentle wind."

Jagurp had a bellyful complaints,
He held out on his wife Qierdy,
But poured out his grumble,
To another of his wife Bakdolet and Markdume.

Jagurp grumbled,
Bakdolet and Markdume,
Just listened silently.
Bakdolet and Jagurp grew up together,
Then they got married,
But she never took Jagurp into account.

She was outspoken,
Jagurp's manner got along with people,
Had reached the end of her forbearance:

"Jagurp,
How could you say such words.
Let dogs listen to you,
I do not know who will listen to you except dogs!

"Do you think your son is unfilial?
He enjoys the support of whole Kirgiz,
All people praise him as a courageous hero,
How can you be afraid of losing your property?

"Hot-blooded youths,
Should be like this.
If he does not have such demeanour,
How could he be a real man?

"Could you have forgotten that,
You took Qierdy to deep forest for getting a son,
And you could not sleep and burst into tears day and night?
You never treat your guests sincerely,
Even never butcher a sheep for them.

"You waste all your lifetime,
You even can not distinguish right and wrong.
Now you have been some children's father,
The eldest child is a daughter.

"Your eldest son Manas is like a fire,
Sirk and Sirak are his brothers.
These two brothers,
Make Manas feel relieved.

"Your son just starts his cause,
You began to spread rumours behind his back.
You are not qualified to be a father,
You are shortsighted and small-minded.

"You are only like a walking corpse and running flesh,
You should roam all over the world and then walk into grave lonely.
If Karamark can be your lucky star,
You will have a chance to go back to Balikun.

"You, a selfish and short-sighted person,
Should stay at home comfortably,
And be attended upon by your wife.
People respectfully call you Khan,
And come to visit you with great respect,
How comfortable and happy you are.

"Manas has been famous,
Sirak must be a somebody in the near future.
Despite the fact that Sirk is silent ordinarily,
His words shock everyone at every moment of truth.

"Jagurp, you are so muddle-headed,
How can you cast spells on people?
Arashi in sixty tribes,
Have regarded your own son Manas,
As a hero of indomitable spirit."

Bakdolet argued a point to death,
And wobbled her apron at the same time.
She talked endlessly,
About her complaints and resentment.

Markdume kept silent,
She filled a bowl full with water,
Then stepped out of the yurt and mumbled:
"Jagurp,
Let disaster fall on you,
I wish Manas and his two brothers,
Be healthy and lucky all the time!"

She poured the water out the door,
Wiped her tears and added:
"Jagurp, go to endure the hardships!"

Markdume returned the yurt,
Jagurp looked at her with an angry glare,
And lifted the leather whip to them,
They were lashed to cry.
But Jagurp walked,
Straightly to Qierdy's yurt.

Right at that moment,
Manas went into the yurt.
Jagurp forced himself to smile,
And put on an affable face.

No matter how warm he was,
Manas responded peacefully:

"My respectful father,
You are Kirgiz rich man,
You payed tribute to Karamark every year,
But you are humiliated by them all the time.

"You are controlled by them and have no freedom,
You only could take your cue from Karamark,
Put your both feet in one boot,
You are a poor man, pure and simple.

"We Kirgiz,
Have became the derision of others,
Since our ancestor Onuzdo died.
Just these Kirgiz people,
Attack Karamark together.
We acted in secret,
And only got a small piece of land and lawn.

"Kontoy administered the west,
Has been defeated by us.
We got some land back,
But we can not set our heart at rest.

"Garmgirchy and Berita discussed,
And are preparing now,
For holding a great ceremony.

"I am your son and you are my father,
But it seems you have forgotten it,
You will lose your face if you go on acting in this way."

Hearing it, Jagurp opened his eyes widely,
And foamed with rage.
"This damned guy did not give me a colt yesterday,
But dreams to hold a ceremony today,
It is a waste of my property and livestock."

Jagurp was dissatisfactory,
But he dare not be against it,
He had to try to look happy,
And invited others to attend the ceremony.

Jagurp's son Sirak wore a felt cap with black brim,
Was very excited.
He did not discuss with his father,
Just went into horse stables by himself.
He asked servants to catch forty mares,
And put them on the fire of pots,
Then butchered all these mares and cleaned them.

"I should be happy and proud,
With a good elder brother,
This is my wish."
Sirak arranged all the things well.

Jagurp forced a smile when he faced the guests,
But he was angry when he lowered his head.
He walked back and forth,
And wrapped the edges of his fur-lined jacket,
He hung his head in sorrow:

"Manas is my eldest son,
Sirak is like his brother Manas,
They want to make me lose my family fortune.
Why should I leave my hope on them,
Let his filial piety go to hell!
Such son can not bring me good end."

Jagurp thought by himself,
Qierdy and Markdume's sons have no hopes,
He looked to Bakdolet to give him a son,
To inherit all his property.

"Let Manas support you!
I will discard Qierdy,
Leave two sons to her,
And let Markdume stay with her.

"As long as Bakdolet bears me a son,
I will live happily with her.
I will herd my livestock carefully,
Let the number of my livestock increase greatly,
Then exchange them into gold and collect."
Jagurp calculated in this way,
But he was still sad.

Guests came in succession,
They crowded on the prairie.
Jagurp, Shihay and Tirkechy,
Giant Garmgirchy, Akberita,
And Kapchaque Bayi also gathered.

They butchered mares for the ceremony,
Over nine hundred already.
Each of them was excited,
With their young hero,
Manas had been their bright lamp.

The elders were all busy,
They held the brim of their clothes,
And could not believe their eyes.
Karamark hid in caves.
Such inspiring things,
Made all Kirgiz pleased!

They were all covered with smiles,
They threw themselves into confusion,
To welcome all guests from afar,
They held praying ceremony everyday.

On the ninth day of the ceremony,
Guests from Badak mountain and Barik city came,
Kalsa and Gelta sent honoured guests.
Guests from Tukuman,
And Karicha tribes,
From Jurjut and Juda,
Also came.

They were all humiliated by Karamark,
They wandered around all the time;
After hearing Kontoy was killed by Manas,
People all came and celebrated.

Guests of Kara Kalpark came in time,
Guests of Baran and Shankay also came.
Not only the guests from afar,
But also those enslaved by Karamark,
Those forced to leave home,
Those had nothing at all,
Those oppressed by Karamark,
All came and celebrated,
Totally there were over ninety thousand guests.

Jagurp's son Sirak,
Was fair and just in handling affairs,
With both wisdom and bravery.
He went to the side of Chuwak with a rush,
And confided to Chuwak:
"Bakay is not young any more,
He is over fifty years old,
We are at the similar age,
Chuwak, my hero,
Please listen to me.

"After counting carefully,

Warri ors led by Kerlgelchal,
Including me and Sirk,
But except you,
Are just forty in number.

"I am Jagurp's son too,
I can not run neck and neck with Manas,
I can not sit side by side with Manas either,
Such things are against my willing.

"If he goes ahead, you should go with him,
If he stops, you should stay by his side.
When he sits for rest, you can play and talk with him.

"My brother Sirk,
I will stand behind you,
We wish hero's great glory,
Will descend on you.

"Boys led by Kerlgelchal,
Please do not just play around;
Young people should take the kettles,
To pour water and let guests wash hands,
And make the big table cloth ready.
If you do not work,
You are not qualified to stand behind the hero."

Chuwak was brave enough but was simple-minded,
He went shoulder to shoulder with Manas,
And never went a step behind Manas.

But Sirak was more clever,
His wise suggestions,
Made Akberita very happy.

The great ceremony lasted for nine days,
Guests were more than ninety thousand.
Happy sounds of laughter rent to the sky,
All their grievance was blown away.

Kumuzky, Erky,
Keyacky and Chorky gathered together.
Games of catching the sheep and horse racing were enough,
Racing horses were all drenched in sweat.

Children could not go to sleep at night,
They began to play hide-and-seek.
Young people sang songs one after another,
Karakoymdo Pildek was small children's patent.

Girls played on the swings,
Kirgiz from forty tribes,
Carried out all kinds of special games,
All people were happy.

Guests of other nations,
Praised amazedly:
"Kirgiz has so many games,
Which make our eyes dazzled.
Boys,
Why are Kirgiz so happy?"

Three times meat everyday,
Had made guests feel hard to swallow.
No one cared milky tea and naan,
The guys in the kitchen were still busy rushing from one to another.

Guests chewed horse neck fat,
Horse guts and horse tripe had an abundant supply.
Stirred horse milk and honey together,
It was the superb cuisine in the world,
They served all to the guests.

Right at that moment,
Racing horses began to walk to the court,
The court was flat and open,
All one hundred and seventy horses scrambled for the first.

The racing horses set out in the morning,
Arrived at the terminal point in the evening.
Hero's steed Arckura,
Was made of whirlwind,
No other steed could catch it.

Koktiky steed and Tilkzler steed,
Were just four years old,
These three steeds chased each other,
They dashed pass the finish line fast.

After their sweat was cooled dry,
Other steeds just passed the finish line.
Seventy steeds got the prizes,
The steed got the first,
Won too many prizes:

There were one hundred single-hump camels,
Five hundred strong horses.
And shining gold and silver,
Valuable silk and brocade.

There were also one thousand,
Mink skin and zibeline,
Lynx skin and leopard skin,
All these made people had too much to watch.

The prizes like mink skin and zibeline,
Lynx skin and leopard skin,
Were all collected by his father Jagurp.

Single-hump camels and horses,
Were all given out to all villagers.
"How broad-minded he is!"
All villagers were as happy as a lark.

Generous Akberita,
Did not even have a look,
At the prizes of Koktiky steed,
He did not leave any of the prize,
And dealt out to all villagers.

"I only want my son leave behind a good reputation,
Guests from afar,
Please take away all these prizes.
There must be a lot people among the guests,
Are observing the breadth of mind of Kirgiz,
And covet the generous prizes."

Aksari steed was the prize,
Tied in the front,
Pulled out seven hairs,
From the long mane of it.

Sirak dealt out all the prizes,
Of Tilczler steed in person.
Sixty tribes Arashi,
All received their deserved prizes.
Guests from all directions,
Praised Sirak.

Young Manas Mounted the Throne

All Arashi of sixty tribes,
Were all wild with the great joy.
The sage Bakay,
Stood up and waved to the villagers.
"Villagers, please come over,
And sit in a shape of ox horn,
I have something to discuss with you."

He asked servants to put carpets,
On the grass for the elders,
All young people just sat on the grass.

Forty warriors led by Kerlgelchal,
Filled horse milk with big bowls,
And served to everyone at presence.

Wise man Bakay,
Said seriously:
"All guests from every side,
Why are you coming to attend the ceremony?

"Jagurp holds the ceremony designedly,
You have been served warmly.
No matter the old and the young,
Are all contented.

"All of you have got generous prizes,
No matter guests of other nations or of our nation,
No one is empty-handed.

"Kirgiz and all tribes here,
Now have put an end to Karamark humiliation,
We celebrate with great joy.
No matter men, women, the old and the young,
We are all too happy to express."

"Holding horse races dealing out prizes,
Wrestling on horses, sparring the feat,
Fighting for competing.
Divided forty people into groups,
To play the game of catching the sheep.
The bowmen shot down the ingots,
There is still the game Chatrash.

"From morning to dark,
Manap people concentrated ,
On games Kichit and Toptash.
We all play to the top of our bent,
And we have forgotten all the bad experiences.

"The braveness of young hero Manas,
Is known by everyone.
He avenged our villagers,
And lectured Karamark severely.
He killed ferocious Kontoy,
Who was like the backbone of Karamark,
And made Karamark lost their leader.

"There are many Karamark,
Among all of you,
Please open your eyes widely,
How broad the breadth of mind of Kirgiz is.

"The great leaders Arokai and Dolias,
Shawruk garrisoned in Sari Arka,
Giants in Aranick,
Heroes too heavy to the steeds,

Duohan, Sokso and Sotoy,
Anyone who wants to come, please act soon.

"Whether Kirgiz are good or bad,
Words are but wind, but seeing is believing,
You all have experienced by yourselves,
You'd better tell the truth to the world.

"Kirgiz stay here today,
Have important things to discuss.
Nothing can be fulfilled without the leader,
So we'd better elect our general.

"Do not follow what others have said,
We must give mature consideration.
Do not do whatever you want,
It is the matter of our fate.

"There are Akberita and giant Garmgirchy,
Many heroes with farsightedness and insight,
And a lot of ambitious persons with a wide range of experience.

"We have elders like Jagurp and Shihay,
The rich like Tirkechy and Kapchaque Bayi,
And the leader of forty tribes Kerlgelchal.
There are a lot of heroes among you,
Who will take on heavy responsibility?
Please express your opinion directly."

Bakay just finished his words,
All other people were in a commotion,
As noisy as sticks in a fire,
And the thunder in the sky.

The earth quaked,
All people united as one man:
"Manas is the best one to take on the throne of general in chief!"

All people shouted in one voice.

Everyone shouted loudly,
No one could hear clearly what others said.
Magical hero Bakay,
Observed around carefully,
He found everyone at presence,
Was wild with joy.

All people danced for joy,
There was no debate,
No argument,
Manas was elected as Sulitan[①].

According to the proper custom,
In obedience to the etiquette of Mamay Khan,
They rolled out a big white felt,
Let hero Manas,
Sit in the center of white felt.

Seventy warriors lifted the white felt,
And put the felt on the honourable seat,
Let hero Manas sit on the seat of throne.

"We have elected Manas as our Khan!"
People came up and bent the knee in worship.
Berita roared with laughter,
Jagurp's face lit up with happiness.

People all jumped for joy,
With their arms waving and feet stamping.
All kinds of birds flew in the sky,
And covered the sun.

Jagurp was so excited,

① Sulitan: Kirgiz language, means the king, or emperor.

That he opened his mind to everyone:
"All of you from all directions,
Please give the halters① of your steeds to my son,
He will perform his duty well,
Only the divine earth,
Can bear such weight except my son.
My worshipful son Manas,
We wish you are always lucky.
You wash the shame,
For Arashi of sixty tribes.

"Forty warriors led by Kerlgelchal,
Formed a group of four hundred and eighty.
They need a Bigan to make the decision,
Who can act as the advisor?

"Please do not hide the opinion in your hearts,
And talk and discuss after the event,
Please negotiate,
And make the decision now,
Do not add burden to my son."

"What Jagurp said is reasonable."
They began to talk mouth to ear.
They discussed with each other,
With great enthusiasm.

Garmgirchy talked excitedly,
Kerlgelchal was still the leader of forty warriors.
Forty warriors were at presence,
They were also glad to be led by Kerlgelchal.

Neither the Bigan high up in the air,
Nor the vow absolutely empty,
Kerlgelchal was content,

① Halters: It indicates the power and authority of a ruler.

With the title of the leader of forty warriors.

Berita put forward a proposal,
To elect another Bigan for forty warriors.

There was a hero called Erqiwule,
He was the son of the rich man Eraman,
He was loath to lag behind for saying:
"We gathered here from all directions,
To the side of our hero.
We are all of one mind,
To battle against Karamark.

"I want to recommend Aji Bayi,
As Bigan of forty warriors.
Although he is younger than us,
He has an impressive presence,
He is also skilled in debate.
He must be a pillar of Kirgiz in the future,
And a best choice,
To assist Manas.

"Whether you agree or not,
From now on,
Brave Aji Bayi is the Bigan in my heart."
All others gazed at each other speechlessly,
No one put forward a different opinion.

No matter in eyes of Kirgiz or other nations,
Aji Bayi had got so much favorable comment,
For a long time.

Everyone picked a pebble,
And to elect through the pebbles.
All people put their pebbles behind him,
Aji Bayi became Bigan without any suspense.

Manas took the power over major issues in his hand,
Others were ready to go back their home.
Before they stood up and went out,
Garmgirchy said to them:

"Dear villagers, relatives and guests,
We all gather here today,
Our fate has tied together,
So there are some words I have to say here and now.

"Arashi of sixty tribes,
Have killed Kontoy and will begin a great exploit,
So we have our heads in the clouds,
And abandon ourselves in great joy.

"Although we won our first battle favorably,
It is not the time for us to rest easy.
Should we spur our steeds now,
And act immediately?"

Before Garmgirchy finished his words,
A sheet of discussions rose:
"Since we have given the halters to Manas,
We are ready to accept his assignment at any time.

"Dolias is entrenched in the west,
Shawruk is in the north.
On the southeast side of us,
In Aranick city,
Vampire Duohan stations there.
Arokai settles in Nalun,
As long as we go out to battle bravely,
We can recapture any position."
Everyone talked to another in high spirit.

Hero Manas continued the talk:
"My father king Jagurp, respectful elder Garmgirchy,

Please let Kirgiz compatriots not be nervous.
Honourable Akberita, Shihay and Tirkechy,
I will head forty warriors,
To clean up Karamark.

"Sari Arka is the strategic fortress,
We should attack and get it first.
Then we can turn back,
To deal with Dolias.
Another two stubborn enemies Arokai and Duohan,
I will not easily give them up.

"I, Manas, am your son,
I am elected as the Khan of all of you.
Since I enjoy the illustrious name as Manas,
How can I let the elders' beard stain with frost,
How can I let all Kirgiz set out,
To fight with blood?
You have suffered too much these years,
So you should enjoy the happy and comfortable life for the future.

"My fellowmen,
I wish you can taste the sweet of your life,
Do not go for battle blindly,
And bring the trouble to yourselves.
Your son Manas,
Will take countless livestock back to all of you.

"Teenagers, the old and the children,
Please stay at home and do not go out.
You have the freedom to visit your friends,
But do not attack the enemies,
Only for seeking to prevail over others.

"I will not go out to battle today or tomorrow,
To make you in trouble.
Damned Karamark,

They must take massive attacks vengefully.

"I killed Kontoy,
But I did not take any of his wealth.
If Karamark dare come and violate,
I will never let them off.
What is more, I will not keep the army back from battle,
For assuring the safety of myself.

"If Karamark dare to invade,
No matter I can win the battle or lose my life,
I will never fear the number of Karamark.

"If the intruders are small in number,
I will not attack them easily,
To avoid interrupting your life,
And bringing pains to all of you."

Hero Manas,
Talked the defence and the offensive.
People discussed on it ardently,
Hero Manas demonstrated his strategies time and again.

A burst of hurried clops came around suddenly,
Three persons galloped their horses over.
They were scared out of their wits,
With their chests heaved like the sheepskin bellows,
They uttered words that did not hang together.

They were two Kirgiz and one Tukuman,
All three were short of breath,
Finally they expressed themselves:
"We went to hunt wild goat,
We climbed over Belsaz mountain,
And arrived at Kuokoydon basin.
There was no Karamark,
On the busy and noisy prairie.

"Horse colts in the bail were hungry and neighed,
Lines of lambs were harnessed by ropes.
Hopeless calves bellowed,
Cows wandered about on the prairie far away.
Sheep bleated one after another,
The sound made us annoyed.
Female goats' breasts swelled,
And cursed their masters with their dripping milk.

"Camels walked in the river valley,
With their humps straight like the mountain.
The camel lambs jumped here and there,
And followed the camels tightly.

"The yurts no people lived in looked ghastly,
We did not dare to step in.
Everything there was as before,
But no living person walked around,
Those who fled away only took away some food,
The prairie was as quiet as the cemetery.

"We held the great ceremony here,
Karamark grasped this chance,
And fled away with no one left."

This is just what we want to say,
Those three people reported in details,
It made Manas burn with anger.
He asked Kerlgelchal to come right away,
Sent servants to each herd village,
To call his warriors together,
To come and wait for his order.

Warriors all gathered together,
Their followings went with them too.
Jagurp Bayi's courtyard,
Was crowded again.

"Akberita and Garmgirchy set out now please,
Do not rest easy at home any more.
Karamark fled away in a hurry,
They must go and report to their Khan.

"The angry enemies led by Bravi,
Will come soon.
If there are no battle gowns and battle horses,
Who will stand out to against the stubborn enemies?

"Shihay and Tirkechy,
Please choose fine steeds and good saddles,
And set out with your capable warriors,
Karamark abandoned their livestock and their yurts.
You should go and take their livestock and property back,
But do not divide the property blindly,
Do not feel happy to the livestock and property you get either.

"For the poor suffered a lot,
Have no horses to ride;
For the bachelors,
Live only on a few livestock,
And have no children to take care.
For the youth have no property,
But need wealth to marry;
For the beggars have no sheep,
But need to butcher sheep to treat their guests.
The people need camels and horses to move,
But have nothing at all,
You can not let them be empty-handed,
You must show your love and mercy.

"Greedy rich men take everything,
Such thing is shamed to mention.

" 'We suffered the humiliation from Karamark in the past,
All things they took away belong to us.

What kind of things did the poor have,
That were worthy for Karamark to snatch?'
It is not fair,
To have such thoughts.

"Please discuss with my father Jagurp,
And act fairly.
People without a family should build a family,
How could a courtyard,
Without the livestock be good?

"What I said just now,
You should remember clearly.
Our decision should make everyone happy,
Do not let anyone hide the complaints in his heart.

"If there are gold, silver and jewelry,
Or other valuables.
My father Jagurp, respectful Berita and Garmgirchy,
Tirkechy, Shihay and Kapchaque Bayi,
Your livestock are countless,
You do not need to look after the valuables specially,
So you six can share the jewelry and valuables.

"Berita and Garmgirchy,
Please go with me;
All rest villagers,
Please stay here and enjoy your life.

"Fierce Shawruk,
Is living beside Kazakh.
Do not let them act as they please,
To plunder Kazakh crazily.
Since they will suffer on their own account,
We must spur our steed and dash forward day and night."

People were busy with the preparation for battle,

Made the steeds ready and everything ready,
And packed the food for battle well,
It is said that, "Heroes' food are in the wild,
Do not load the steeds heavily."
The hero ordered everything well and then set out.
Since Karamark have come,
The hero would go and struggle for mastery with the enemies.
He would rather go to die if it was his fate,
He would let Karamark,
Experience the fearfulness of Arashi.

The hero went on the journey of battle again,
He went forward rapidly along the riverbank.
Kirgiz got rid of Karamark's humiliation,
They held the ceremony for ten days.

Who had ever thought in their hearts,
They were the strongest enemies of Karamark.
Without engaging much in a battle,
Karamark chose to flee away,
Like the frightened birds.

Severe Punishment to Stubborn Enemy Shawruk

Karamark under Kontoy,
All climbed over the mountains to flee,
And to seek refuge with Dolias Khan.
Heard the well known name of Manas,
Dolias lost the courage to go and fight.
But he sent servant to go day and night,
To report the news to Shawruk.

Arokai got the news too,
The augur Rangduke's words,
Hid in his heart deeply,
He recalled suddenly,
What the augur told him:
"When you turn a problem over in your mind,
You should take your unfavorable factors into account.
There is none to equal Manas on earth,
You have no chance to win if you fight against Manas!

"Since hero Manas has raised his head high,
Nalun city will not belong to us any more.
Karamark under me,
Should move and abandon Nalun under the cover of night.

"Do not let Koshaoyi find you,
Otherwise he will cut off on your way,
And make us reached an impasse.

"If we delay two days,

Koshaoyi will get the information.
If he mounts his Totoru steed,
And cuts off on our fleeing way,
That will be the end of our life,
So we should go under the cover of night without sleeping."

Thought of this, without delaying a second,
Arokai ordered to load the necessities on camels and set out first.
Heard Ayikoler's name,
Arrogant and domineering Karamark,
Mounted their horses with no time for putting saddles on,
Did not dare to delay any minute,
Fled away in a hurry.

Dolias was travel-stained,
When he got to Shawruk's station in Kotuliac,
He poured out his woes to Shawruk,
On Sari Arka mountain.

Dogged Shawruk was a hero,
He was a well known valiant general.
If his brutish nature was given full play,
He was totally a bloodthirsty fiend;
If you let him take other's hat off,
He would cut that person's head off,
He was such a murderous fiend.

When Shawruk heard the news of hero Manas,
He sucked his lips like a hungry wolf.
He called and counted his soldiers,
And made the preparation to go out to battle.

He sent out a double-steed messenger①,
From Boktur in Kangayi,
To invite Kermzshy's son Muradiler to come to his station.

① Double-steed messenger: In order to quicken the journey in emergency situation, prepares two horses for a messenger, let him change the horse and go forward without any stop, so it is called double-steed messenger.

He checked the border from time to time,
He was on patrol at sentry post and the mountain pass.

Kartkarlan's daughter Sayikali,
Lived in a remote mountain Yingan.
Shawruk sent soldiers to find the steed,
To invite her too.

Karamark hero Wusan,
Was also a person he took a fancy.
All heroes came and gathered,
Except Neskara.

Shawruk hoped in vain,
To stamp Kirgiz land flat under the feet of his troops,
And to crush Kirgiz into bakemeat.

He did not drink tea but drank human blood,
He did not drink wine but drank venom.
Put aside the wine and venom,
He talked wildly:

"Since Qingersh became our king,
Since we Karamark began to dominate the world,
Who dare resist against us,
Who dare not kneel to us,
Who dare raise a rebellion?

"Now Kirgiz are so furious and reckless,
We can not let sapling grow into big tree,
If so, God Erent-Munat① will not forgive us Karamark!
Kirgiz are so wild and arrogant,
They should have been punished severely.

"Qingersh also should be punished,

① God Erent-Munat: Tradition has it that it is the Karamark God that can bless them peace.

Why he let foxy Jagurp,
Administer the vast land to the north of Altay?

"All Brute people should be killed,
Why they are still alive now?
Dudar was killed on Tubler ridge,
The commercial group of one thousand camels,
All disappeared with no clue left,
It must be Manas got all the camels.

"Stationed in the west,
Could hold up millions of troops by himself,
And could sweep forward from victory to victory.
Kontoy, the great hero,
Never moved back in the face of fierce enemies,
Was also killed by Manas!

"If we let Kirgiz go on making waves,
Our god must punish us severely."

Shawruk was homicidal,
And could not calm down.
He was angry and fierce,
But said in confidence.
He gave out the order loudly:
"I have a troop with more than sixty thousand soldiers and horses!
Please gather together and go out to battle with me tomorrow."

Among the soldiers of Shawruk,
There were a lot of Kontoy's following,
They expressed their complaints to Shawruk.
They were detained by Shawruk,
And were forced to enroll to the troops and set out with him.

"We were haunted by ghosts to come here,
We lost our senses and walked ourselves into trouble.
What does Kontoy's death have to do with us?

Manas did not blame and punish,
The common soldiers and common people.

"If he meets us again,
They must cut our belly open,
And take out our hearts and livers,
Then abandon us on the desolate lands,
Let the wild beasts worry us.

"Kirgiz must take the avenge mercilessly,
They will take away our girls,
And kill our parents.

"Let the god punish Shawruk,
He forced us with his power,
And drove us to the battlefield to die for him,
Then let us be buried in desolate lands.

"We can stay at our homes peacefully,
Rather than come here to die,
We can go down on our knees,
To ask for Kirgiz forgiveness,
At least we can save our lives."
They praised the humanness of Manas in secret,
And cursed Shawruk's cruelty at the same time.

Most tents were prepared well,
For the battle of next day,
And put up in the wilderness.
Just on the same day,
Lion Manas also got there.
On the prairie in Sari Arka,
There were Karamark's tents everywhere.

The lion chose to stay at the foot of the mountain,
He put up the tents and pitched the camp.
Akberita, Bakay and Garmgirchy,

Came along with Manas to here.
Forty warriors,
And four hundred and eighty soldiers were ready to set out.

Heroes Manas and Chuwak,
Went shoulder to shoulder.
There were totally four hundred and eighty five heroes,
Including the three elders and all warriors.

When they arrived at Sari Arka mountain,
It was already after dusk.
They were all at ease,
Like at home.

Marsh land was in the middle,
Soldiers and generals garrisoned around it.
He regarded all these fierce enemies,
As the trousers legs.

Demiurge created hero Manas,
He was out of the ordinary.
His age was,
Around eleven and twelve.
His matchless strength,
Could throw the eighteen layers universe.

He could hold countless enemies by himself alone,
Even though thousands of enemies came to the border,
He never felt worried and lost his confidence.
He was as hard as the steel,
Timidity and him were incompatible.

Although Manas was very young,
He had no difference,
With those mature heroes.
If there was anything wrong with him,
Hero Chuwak was behind him and supported him.

And his brother,
All-conquering hero Sirak.
The augur,
Was just Tolic who stood aside.
He could watch scapula carefully,
To know the future exactly.

Alikan from Alim,
Stood at the side of the hero.
Arash people spurred their horses to the battle,
Even the footmarks of foxes were in their eyes.

Hero Showtu,
Was penetrating and agile.
They set out at night,
He could judge the track of the wolves,
With a hasty glance on the way to the battle.
Respectful Showtu,
Could foresee with divine accuracy.

Each of forty warriors had his unique skills,
Aji Bayi was their leaders.
The boys were brave and wise,
They could defeat enemies each time.

There were wizards counted on their fingers,
Prophets watched scapula,
They looked for enemies' track,
And never made it wrong.
All of them were chosen out,
To patrol and watch the enemies.

Bogwuler warrior watched the footmarks of wild wolves,
Two generals Erchywuler and Bozwuler,
Stood guard for general in chief's camp,
With the utmost concentration.
Kerlgelchal shouted and ran about here and there,

Like the groggy drunk.
His black and white beard shone the black light.

He was so talkative,
Just like a naughty boy,
With his head shaking.
He sent his servants,
To stand guard in turn.
One went to sleep,
And the other stood guard till morning.

Karamark were eager for action,
They were ready to attack Kirgiz.
They never saw the braveness of Kirgiz,
They never experienced the strategies of Kirgiz either.

Ketay general Muradiler,
Karamark hero Wusan,
Kartkarlan heroine Sayikali,
Lived peacefully without fighting,
For many years,
Their strategies and tactics had been rusty.

Quick and neat persons had mounted the horses,
Normal ones just put on their battle gowns,
And sluggish persons were still eating and drinking.
Kerlgelchal beat the battle drum,
Karamark people and horses all became a scene of chaos.
Heard the rumble of the battle drum,
"Shawruk is punished by Khuda!"
Karamark were in great fear and trembling.
As the rumble of battle drum came around,
A lot people fled away with wetting their pants in terror.

Karamark soldiers and horses were overspread,
The battle with blood bleeding,
Was on the verge of breaking out.

Kirgiz acted rapidly,
They prepared all things ready and mounted the steeds.

Giant Bakay held the great battle banner high,
Akberita stood shoulder to shoulder with him.
Another giant Garmgirchy,
Was commanding and intrepid.

Among all Arashi people of sixty tribes,
Jagurp's son Manas,
Was a matchless hero in the world.
He mounted the great Arckura steed,
His strapping figure was as big as Aoboler Peak.

The long spear was waved in his hand,
The toe caps of his Nuor battle boots were cocked up.
His knife hummed in the sheath,
The crescent battle ax clanged on his waist.
The red battle drum in Ketay style,
Was rumbled even a fly fell on it.

The hero stood straight like a peak pricked the sky,
His whole being was shining,
He led his generals and soldiers and was ready to the battlefield.
The mighty and splendid hero,
Watched under the battle banner.

Karamark zigzagged on their way stopped their steps,
Boundless depression rose from their hearts.
Seeing the imposing manner of the hero,
They seemed to have seen the death in front of their eyes.
They only worried about their own lives,
Their wives, children and property,
Had already been thrown beyond the highest heavens.

An earthshaking shout came around suddenly,
With a thick and long spear waving in the hand,

A blast of dust rose behind the horse,
The dark clouds covered the sun.

A thug rushed out from Karamark troops,
His horrific face was like the cloudy sky,
The damned guy wanted to die.
He was hero Taript,
Who rushed forward to fight first bravely.

"Taript buckled on his armour and went into battle,
He will pound Kirgiz to pieces,
We will see where they can flee!
They can go nowhere and we want to know,
Which level of the hell they can be thrown into?"
Karamark cheered and jumped for joy.

Showtu was really lived up to his reputation as hero,
With a felt cap as big as the cover of the skylight of a yurt.
He mounted a steed with the color of red steel,
Rolled forward like the tornado.

Each hero fought against him,
Was defeated by him.
He wore armour and steel coat,
He always went in the front and beat the enemies back.

Any time he stretched his hand out,
He would get what he wanted.
He stabbed others with his spear,
And pricked them in the air on the point of his spear.

If he had a bare-handed fight with the opponent,
He always put the enemy on the ground and stamped on his breast,
He was a hero from Dorborn tribe,
He gave up the name of his tribe,
But shouted loudly the name "Manas!",
And bore down on enemies.

Showtu and Taript fought with each other,
The hatred between Kirgiz and Karamark upgraded.
Both of them made their mind in secret,
Did not let the other be alive.

The points of their spears ran foul of each other,
Karamark hero Taript,
Was a bridle-wise guy.
He fended off the coming spear,
He made rapid and irresistible moves,
Threw Showtu down the steed.

Hero Yumat from Wusan,
Spurred his steed out immdediately,
And was thrown down the horse with only one round.
Taript was swollen with arrogance,
The warrior Bogwuler came next,
Was stabbed down the horse and was nearly stamped by the horse.

Coming in a hurry from the back,
To save his companions,
That was what a real hero did.

Kapchaque Bayi's son Aji Bayi,
Had the similar age with Chuwak,
Was nine years old at the moment.
He whipped his steed on its bottom,
And dashed ahead as fast as the wind.

Aji Bayi came and fought,
Taript was even braver after each fight,
Although the opponents were all thrown down the horses,
They escaped with bare life,
Kirgiz warriors were all back alive,
It made Taript very angry.

Faced Aji Bayi,

He built up all his energy.
Kapchaque Bayi's son Aji Bayi,
Was well known to everyone.

Taript watched his enemy carefully,
With his eyes open wild:
"You, such a poor boy,
Go away to save your life."
Aji Bayi held the halter and turned his steed,
He went head-on towards Taript with no fear.

Aji Bayi was highly skillful in his tactics,
Any clash need tactics,
Anyone could defeat the ferocious enemy,
As long as he could find the opportunity for combat composedly.

Arrogant Taript,
Said ferociously:
"I must build up my strength,
And throw Aji Bayi down on the ground."

Aji Bayi was with full composure,
But the opponent in front of him,
Failed to show restraint.
Faced the fierce enemy,
He did not intend to retreat.

Taript rushed in front of him,
He lowered his hand and dodged aside.
Avoided the enemy's spear,
He turned his horse right away,
And stabbed out his spear at the same time.
Before Taript turned his steed,
Aji Bayi had aimed at the object.

"Here is the edge of the saddle,
And the upper position of his hips.

His armour was just raised up,
It is right his vital part."

Aji Bayi held the handle of the spear against the saddle,
With the inertia of the impulsive force of his steed,
He stabbed the enemy from the side.
The point of the spear was stabbed from the back of enemy's waist,
As deep as two spans.
A stream of blood flew out,
On the bottom of the steed.

Taript's brown steed,
Had fought a hundred battles,
It made off its hooves at once,
And pulled Aji Bayi's spear out.

It all happened suddenly,
But it did not make Aji Bayi dejected,
He was sharp in his movements,
He held his spear in his hand tightly,
And closed in on his enemy again.

When Taript just turned round,
His neck was pointed by the spear,
And the spear point ran into his throat.
Mountain-like Taript,
Fell on the ground like a round felt cap.
Shoutings came out from enemies camps,
Taript lost his life in the battlefield,
Shawruk spurred his steed for the battle soon afterwards.

As seeing Shawruk's figure,
Aji Bayi did not stay there even for a second.
He held the halter and turned round,
Came back to the front of Bakay quickly,
And talked his mind to Bakay:

"Who is the hero come to fight right now?
I have been exhausted,
So I have to come back to you without saving my face,
I do not dare to fight with him blindly."

"Aji Bayi, what you said is reasonable,
Well known Shawruk.
Got the throne of Khan by his great strength,
Nobody fought with him could be alive.

"So many years went by,
He was praised by all Karamark,
They had full confidence on him.
You are rational and you did right,
We have our heroes and warriors,
They will go and fight with him."

Hearing Bakay's words,
Giant Garmgirchy,
Spurred his steed right away,
Came and stood in front of Bakay,
Asked for going to the battle:
"We have been surrendered by Karamark,
For so many years,
We had no freedom at all.

"Now we have full confidence and courage,
We decide to unlock our cage.
We will not be reluctant,
When we face the fierce enemy Shawruk,
We dare to die to fight it out.

"Please give us the order, Bakay,
Let me go and fight with him.
No matter I win or lose,
Please let me go.
In case I get stabbed by him,

Fall on the ground,
There is hero Akberita behind me.

"If seven people go to fight together,
We do not have so many heroes,
Do not let young Manas go out to battle.
Even if he asks for it,
You should dissuade him and hold his halter.

"We set out in a hurry when we got the order,
We did not make good preparation,
We were too confident about ourselves.
I advise you not to let Manas fight,
I have a lot to tell you.

"These fierce enemies,
Were all intrepid and doughty,
They all aimed at Manas.
Please look at those three strong Karamark guys,
We must kill them one by one,
So we should go to fight one by one.

"If they do sneak attack,
We will fall into their plot.
Young Manas comes out to battle for the first time,
If there is an accident in the battle,
He will lose the halo on his head.

"Before we kill Shawruk,
Please protect Manas carefully,
Do not let our hero feel lonely,
We should march forward courageously and bravely.

"If Shawruk is stabbed and falls down his steed,
Those three heroes behind him,
Must flee away as soon as they can.
Under such circumstance,

Who dare fight with Manas?

"Shawruk is very crafty,
And murderous,
He came this time with his troops,
Is aimed at our hero Manas.

"They take great pains,
And invite those three heroes,
Each of them is the pillar of Karamark.
We have been their neighbours for a long time,
We know them very well.
Although we are giants,
We are not as strong as them,
And do not have as many haloes as they have.
We wish the lucks Allah gave us,
Will descend on Manas."

Garmgirchy finished his words,
Whipped his steed hard.
On the way to the battlefield,
He saw a big wild willow,
And a big phoenix tree,
So he pulled them out and put the trees in front of the saddle.

The tree was as big as a yurt,
The leaves were waving with the wind.
The land with the size of a sheepfold,
Was kept out from sunshine by the leaves.

He was without rival in strength,
But was frustrated with all his talents.
Glory and happiness did not go to him,
He had no chance to carry out his ideals even with matchless talents.

Karamark hero Shawruk's steed,
Made a dense dust all over the sky.

Only the massive earth could bear him.

His beard was never shaved,
His eyes were brimming with radiating vigour.
Except his eyes,
All his face was covered by his beard.
Long hair on his temples,
Covered both his ears,
And his long hair hung down his hips.

He twisted his hair into a bunch like a rope,
And wound it two rounds on his waist.
The heroes fought with him,
Were all scared by his hideous face down their horses.

Shawruk whipped his steed ahead and stared his eyes,
When he saw the figure of Garmgirchy,
He was wild with great anger.
He pulled out a tree from the river bank,
And put it in front of the saddle too.

They were one arrow away with each other,
But they could not see each other in the dust.
With the tree waving in their hands,
The leaves fell off in winds.

The clops came round from the dust,
Without seeing a person.
Who would win and who would be killed,
No one could forecast.
Seeing this,
Timid guys all fell off from their horses.

Garmgirchy waved the trunk of the tree,
And pounded it to his enemy.
Arrogant giant Shawruk,
Also waved the trunk in his hand.

They made dust rose,
High to the sky.
The dust covered all the heroes.

The dust faded away gradually,
Garmgirchy and Shawruk were well-matched,
And appeared from the dust.
The trees in the hand had already been gone,
Garmgirchy sat on the saddle with both hands empty.
Karamark hero Shawruk,
Held the sharp wolf-tongue spear,
And pricked to Garmgirchy's back with his full strength.

The spear drifted off the object,
And stabbed on Garmgirchy's thigh,
A gust of blood flew along his leg.

Giant Berita felt sad,
When he saw this.
"I have to fight!"
There was no time for him to consider the rule of order,
He turned round and rushed to the battlefield.
He came at full speed,
Fought with Shawruk without telling his name.

Shawruk and giant Berita,
Fell into the bloody battle right away.

Garmgirchy returned Kirgiz camp,
The blood streamed down and he was helped down the horse.
Put the medicine on his wound,
And wrapped it with cloth tightly.

One of the foreleg of Berita's steed,
Was chopped off by his enemy unfortunately.
The steed turned two rounds at the same place,
Then threw his master on the ground.

Seeing the urgent situation,
Chuwak was too worried.
He mounted his horse at once,
With his heart afire.

Seeing the figure of Chuwak,
Battle-hardened Muradiler,
Turned it over in his mind secretly:
"The coming boy,
Has one and the only demerit,
It seems his bones do not grow well enough.

"He is a strong and tall hero,
With broad shoulders.
Anyone who is defeated by him,
Will be crumbed into pieces.

"The hero fights with him,
Will never win him easily.
Once he is encouraged by others,
He will get a swelled head,
This is a vital weakness of him."

Manas stood in the camp,
And could not calm down:
"The father suffered a setback in battlefield,
How could his son go and help him?
Could it be said that we do not have any warrior and hero!"

The lion spurred his magical steed Arckura,
And rushed to the battlefield venturously.
Chuwak got first,
And he helped Berita who was on the ground,
Mount the horse again.

Shawruk said to himself:
"I should approach him before he stands up,

And cut his head off like cut a sheep's head.
Cut his belly open like cut a watermelon."

He turned his steed round,
The black steed made its four hooves busy.
It ran as fast as it could,
Then they met Manas face to face.

Overbearing Shawruk Khan,
Happened meet the black mane wolf in his face.
It might be Khuda bestow the power to the hero,
Before the fight,
Shawruk was already scared to be in cold sweat.
Manas Khan and Shawruk Khan,
Fought severely with the dust rose high to the sky.

Shawruk dare not prick easily,
He was always reluctant to act.
When Shawruk rode on the black horse,
He was like a mountain.
He said to his opponent in this way:
"Your bottom is in my eyes exactly,
Except Berita and Garmgirchy,
Who is another hero?

"Once I fought with Koshaoyi,
We had a fierce fight;
But we were well-matched in strength,
It was a pity of us.

"But you, boy, where are you from?
Your murderous expression in your eyes,
Made me furious.
I guess again and again,
But I can not figure out who you are,
Is there anyone ever mentions your childhood name?"

Shawruk asked the name of his enemy,
With his eyes opening wide and surprised,
He held the halter and did not dare to fight blindly.

Kirgiz magical eagle,
Was very confident with chest and head high:
"You said you are Shawruk,
And you are really that person,
You also said that Berita and Garmgirchy,
Are the only heroes of Kirgiz.

"You said you once fought with Koshaoyi,
And you were well-matched with him.
It is just you want to make things unnecessarily mysterious,
So as to build yourself up.

"You are a common person or a Khan,
You are a noble or a a servant,
I do not know your antecedents.

"I trust the arrangement of the fate,
I will take off some layers of your armours.
Leave your scorpion venom out,
I will cut your head off and take it back to our camp.

"I will not hide anything to you,
I can tell you who I am.
My father's name is Jagurp,
You want to know his status,
He was Jagurp Bayi,
But now they call him Jagurp Khan.
My name is Manas,
And now I have been grown up.

"We Arashi people,
Were humiliated by you Karamark,
And payed heavy taxes each year in humble reverence.

You plundered us Kirgiz,
Rode roughshod over our people.
All of you are here today,
You can just pay the debt of blood off.

"I am right in my prime,
So I must root all you out,
And I will expose and criticize your crimes.

"I will chop off your waist if fighting with me,
Let your commander feel hopeless and sad.
Your blood will flow in stream if fighting with me,
And I will take your ribs apart.

"Kara Kirgiz humiliated by you,
Are waiting for this good news for a long time.
I, Manas, belong to Arashi,
Six generations till now,
Have suffered devastation from you.

"You cut pregnant women's bellies open,
Who can do such things in the world?
It was a rare tragedy on earth!
You wolves behave so cruelly,
You have a full record of crimes.

"Use all your skills,
Do not delay and try to save your life!"

The black mane wolf's words,
Stirred Shawruk deeply.
He was wild with anger,
And he decided to sip up the blood of Manas.

Young Manas went out to battle for the first time,
He had little experience but was brave enough.
Manas deserved to be called great hero,

He showed no careless mistakes in front of his enemies.

He owned the well-known name Manas,
And excellent tactics.
Ant casual action he did,
Any inconspicuous skill on him,
Would make his opponents hard to hold their own.

Battle-seasoned Shawruk pricked his spear out,
But Manas warded his spear off.
Muradiler watched carefully,
And found a truth that Jagurp's son Manas,
Had better skills than Shawruk.

The spear in hand was kept off by Manas,
Shawruk felt terribly ashamed.
The waving spear made great noise,
Which made people felt nervous in heart,
And felt scared in heart.

Extremely vicious Shawruk cried hysterically,
It made everyone heard it felt panicked.
The black steed under him clashed in everywhere,
Dust rose high and covered the sunshine.

Shawruk did not fear at all,
And spurred his steed face to face.
Shawruk was wild with anger,
For his spear was warded off,
He felt sad.
The fierce expression was in his eyes,
It could only be unruffled after he cut off the head of Manas.

Leopard-like hero sat on the back of Arckura safely,
Stared at his opponent with all his eyes.
Shawruk pricked again,
But it was kept off once more.

Manas took the advantage of the opportunity,
And pricked toward Shawruk from the side.

The spear forged by Bolicbye himself,
Would never be broken,
The spear body was made of white steel,
And the spear point could pierce through everything.

Sharp Sear spear,
Pierced the ribs of the enemy,
And through his chest,
And came out from his back,
With the point of the spear still shining.

The stubborn enemy was stabbed by the hero,
When the hero pulled out his spear,
The blood flew out from Shawruk,
Like the water in a river.

Seeing the blood on his body,
Shawruk called up his last strength,
And spurred his steed to fight,
To find the chance to stab Manas down the horse.

The black mane wolf could not let his complot succeed,
He changed his tactics ceaselessly.
Shawruk pricked Manas on the back brutally,
Without considering his own pain.

Hero Manas lowered his head and waist,
To the saddle and held horse mane with his hands,
Sidestepped the vital jab.

Shawruk chased after Manas like hell,
But the time of his death was coming to him.
Manas turned round and pricked his spear out,
And warded Shawruk's spear off his hand.

Shawruk was with his both hands empty,
He knew his end was coming.
The black steed was frightened,
And rushed away from the side of Manas.

The master Shawruk held the halter,
Before he turned round,
Manas had pierced through his back heart,
With bloody Sear spear.

All soldiers at presence,
Saw the power of their hero.
Moutain-like Shawruk,
Was on the point of spear and was waved in the air.

Mountain-like Shawruk fell off his steed,
It made earthshaking noise,
Like a mountain collapsed.
Karamark shouted and cried loudly,
Their desperate tear ran down like rivers.

The young hero attacked fiercely,
And he was never soft on the enemies,
Till he pierced through enemy's heart with his spear,
Then he pulled his spear out unhurriedly.

Lion Manas raised his head proudly,
Sat on the back of Arckura securely.
Faced countless enemies,
He went back and forth with no fear.

Karamark felt scared to death,
When they saw how powerful Manas was.
No one dare fight with him,
Who dare to fight?

Karamark sent Wusan to go out to battle,

But he did not dare to go even a step forward.
Muradiler and Sayikali,
Did not think of going out to battle,
But considered how they could flee away:

"Shawruk Khan lost his life,
Hero Kontoy has disappeared.
Taript's corpse was abandoned in wilderness,
I think I meet my bane today.

"If I do not go out to battle,
They will laugh at me and think I am timid,
And say that Kirgiz has frightened me to death.
Who will obey me in this world?
For this famous Kirgiz general,
Who dare fight with him and who can defeat him?"

Wusan racked his brains,
And finally forced himself to go out to battle.

He was a hero went to fight for the first time,
His steed was a brown horse with long mane.
The warrior on the battlefield for the first time,
Wore a meshy iron armour,
He was called Karamark warrior Wusan.

People all knew there were five heroes in Begin,
He was one of them.
Among five cities of Begin,
He was well known by everyone.

He held the long spear in his hand,
He braced up and came to fight.
New hero, new opponent,
He was desperate and fought it out.

Kirgiz hero was highly skilled in military drill,

He was a brave general could defeat fierce enemy,
He fought with enemies face to face.
Wusan had made preparation,
That if his enemy was on upon him,
He would turned his steed and fled away at once.

When Wusan was going to fight,
Muradiler and Sayikali,
Were also shipped their horses and followed him:

"What abilities do Kirgiz have?
They know little about tactics and lack wisdom,
And have no actual combat experience at all,
They can not win in the battle."
They followed Wusan tightly,
Whipped their horses and shouted to cheer for him.

Seeing their opponents come together,
Chuwak and Erchywuler were wild with anger,
They were great heroes in the world.

Chuwak was furious,
And shouted loudly:
"We only send one hero to the battlefield,
But you send three heroes at one time.
Noisy Karamark,
Why are you so infamous,
That send three people fight one?

"Three to one, how can this kind of thing exist in the world?
Perfidious Karamark,
How can you be so shameless.

"Please begin from me if you fight,
Do not say two, five need not fear either.
I will clean all of you up!"

Showtu came up from the back,
But Chuwak did not notice that.
When Showtu shipped his horse and dashed forward,
Erchywuler spurred his steed right away,
And went with Showtu shoulder to shoulder,
He approached the enemy.

Muradiler held his horse and turned round,
When he saw Chuwak,
And rushed toward Chuwak brutally,
With dust rising high behind him.

As seeing Showtu,
Heroine Sayikali whipped her brown steed,
And chased him hard.
Garmgirchy also dashed forward from the side.

Garmgirchy rushed out his camp,
Berita also went without any hesitation,
They chased enemies together,
As fast as the arrow.

Self-glorifying Karamark hero Wusan,
Rushed out from one side,
And pricked his spear toward Manas.

How can the black mane wolf be stabbed by his enemy,
He is as high as a mountain.
Do not say Wusan himself,
Even five enemies came together,
His power could not be turned back.

He did not use his Sear spear,
He raised thousand-Jin battle ax,
And cut Wusan's spear in two.

When the ax met the spear,

Both Wusan's hands held the spear tightly,
Were nearly broken from his radius.
It was the best thing he could save his life,
Wusan was scared and then fled away quickly.

At the moment the hero turned his head,
Showtu was just pricked down the horse,
By heroine Sayikali.

He turned Arckura's head hurriedly,
And rushed ahead against time.
Sear spear in his hand,
Was approaching Sayikali.

Garmgirchy arrived first at that moment,
Sayikali had to whip her horse away,
And leave Showtu for saving her life.

Chuwak and Muradiler,
Ran neck and neck in their fight,
When the black mane wolf turned his head,
Muradiler was filled with fear,
And ran away from the battlefield quickly.

Muradiler, Sayikali and Wusan,
Were as timid as mice.
None of them fought with their enemies severely,
And was without even a drop of blood on them,
But stopped the fight and fled away as soon as possible.

Kankor① hero Manas,
Whipped his steed with high spirit,
He spurred his steed and waved his spear,

① Kankor: Kirgiz language. Its original meaning is bloodthirster. It extends in meaning that dare to see blood. In epic, this word is always used to describe the powerful, strong characteristics of positive heroes. It is way of inverted extension in literature.

Rushed to enemies' camp,
The shouting of "Manas" went up in the air.

Heard the earth-shaking shout,
Karamark only had strength to flee away,
When Karamark heard the well known name of Manas,
All their thoughts were already dashed.
Kontoy's lamsters,
Had already reported all the things to their leader.

Generals had lost their faces,
In front of their soldiers.
They began a tangled fight,
Kirgiz were all very brave.
Kirgiz made all-out efforts,
To win this battle.

Foreheads were broken,
Faces were wounded.
Blood ran down the faces,
The flesh was battered.
The wounded walked here and there with their sticks,
It could not bear the sight.

"Run away quickly, do not stay here!"
Soldiers of both sides shouted.

Manas Khan, hero Chuwak,
Warrior Sirak more nimble than children,
Forty warriors led by Kerlgelchal,
All whipped their horses hard,
Akberita and Garmgirchy,
Also fought the enemies bravely.
Except Bakay,
No one watched the battle.

Bakay was a person had nature under his thumb,

He held Kirgiz banner high.
Under his encouragement,
Kirgiz all fought with full confidence.
Only four hundred and eighty warriors,
Defeated and chased sixty thousand Karamark,
Like wind blew the leaves,

Karamark led by Muradiler and Sayikali,
Fled toward the direction of Kangayi,
Like stray dogs.

Heroes and generals led the way in the front,
And climbed over Kezlikey mountain.
The poor Karamark were on the earth,
But death was coming to them.

Jagurp's son Sirak,
Had occupied Kezlikey mountain.
Thousands of Karamark came in succession,
But none of them could pass it.
He was like hungry dragon and boa,
He stopped enemies' footsteps tough.

Acephalous Karamark soldiers,
Escaped along the mountainside against their will.
Even nameless Kirgiz warriors,
Cut many Karamark generals' heads off too.

A rout was like a landslide,
No matter soldiers or generals only wanted to flee away.
No one dare stay for a second,
Even turned round for a glance.

Forty warriors led by Kerlgelchal,
Killed at least a hundred enemies,
And at most a thousand enemies by each.
Each of the warriors' attendants,

Captured more than ten enemies.

They seized countless saddles,
It was hard to count and tie,
So they had to carry with battle horses.

Akberita's son Chuwak,
Laid in ambush on Sari Arka ridge.
He led Salte people and dashed out suddenly,
Which took greater panic to enemies.

Chuwak led Erchywuler,
Rushed into enemies' capital city,
They arrived at a garden in the city,
And lay there to let sunshine wash the dust.

Shawruk's daughter Naklai,
Had bright face like the moon.
White face was like mirror,
She preserved her grave bearing.
"We want to watch her for one glance all the time!"
All people watched her ceaselessly.

Her silk dress was long enough to sweep the ground,
Her gracefully slender figure attracted everyone.
Forty maidservants stood on both her sides,
Which made no one could be close to her.

Hot-blooded hero Chuwak,
Took all girls out of the palace,
As the spoils of war.

Beautiful and clever Naklai,
Was just at the age of thirteen.
She grew in a free environment,
And was as pretty as flower and jade.
Except Chuwak,

No one else intrude into her garden.

Chuwak was around twelve years old,
He was naughty but clever.
He asked those girls to cover their faces with veils,
Then he left the girls led by Naklai,
To Erchywuler,
And asked Erchywuler to take the girls back to their camp safely.

Chuwak himself opened the godown,
Put all gold and silver on his camels.
He ordered the chefs and the herdsmen,
To tie gold and silver tightly on the camels.

Their destination was Samurhan,
One hundred camels carried the gold and silver.
Another one hundred camels,
Carried rice and flour.

When he went out of the palace,
He met with Showtu face to face.
He let Showtu administer the camels,
He went to Samurhan in the front.

Young hero Chuwak,
Led in the front happily.
Warriors took the trophies,
And drove the camels to Samurhan.

Common people on the foot of mountains,
Lion Manas whipped his steed on mountainside,
When he met Sirak.
Garmgirchy and giant Berita,
Arrived in time without any delay.

"I must hotly pursue and fiercely attack,
Or my anger can not be cooled.

Where are the forty warriors?
Please call them up right now."
He gave the order Sirak.

Wise Akberita continued the words,
All his words were reasonable:
"Brave young lion,
You can not act as you please in going to battle.
As an elder,
I have experienced much more than you.

"Consider maturely can eat flour,
Consider recklessly can only drink cold water.
Chew carefully can provoke the appetite,
Eat eagerly can get the throat stuck easily.

"Your warriors,
Have all been tired.
You chased after the enemies hotly,
It is not a brilliant decision.

"If we act rashly and blindly,
To dash forward to pursue enemies,
Enemies station in Aranick,
Are led by Banus and Duohan.
They will risk their life to attack our backside,
It will make Kirgiz had no retreat.

" 'The hatred to Shawruk and Kontoy,
Has been payed off.'
Kirgiz led by Jagurp,
Will be happy quietly.

"It is most dangerous,
To take imprudent action.
I can not prevent your action,
But Garmgirchy and Bakay,

Forty warriors led by Kerlgelchal,
Are pursueing enemies hard.
You'd better go back to the side of the banner,
And let them gather under the banner."

Berita advised in earnest words and with good intensions,
The hero listened carefully and quietly:
Under the waving banner,
Manas held his halter.

The two heroes Garmgirchy and Bakay,
Were discussing the warfare.
"What a happy thing,
An exceptional young boy,
Gave enemies a severe lesson."

Seeing Berita lead the lion to them,
Both of them,
Told their hearts to Manas with joy.
Bakay Khan opened his mouth,
Of profound significance:

"Arashi of sixty tribes,
Were forced to leave their hometown.
After kind Onuzdo died,
They became the lambs could be butchered by anyone.

"People lost their freedom,
And were forced to be slaves.
They rushed about anywhere,
And expelled by Karamark at anytime.

"Once two of them met,
They would cry and complain to each other.
With full complaints and no happiness,
No one could smooth their suffering out.
You fought for less than three years,

Hero Manas, because of your blessing,
We Kirgiz get today's happiness again.

"Karamark swaggered before others for many years,
They trod our people underfoot.
Kirgiz suffered a lot,
Who is willing to listen to their suffering?

"They cut pregnant women's bellies open as playing games,
Who have ever seen such thing?
From east to west,
Arokai plundered everywhere like a mad dog.

"The time of Kontoy and Shawruk has gone,
It is just the same as we like it.
Each of Berita's words is reasonable,
Manas, you should keep it firmly in your mind.

"If you chased the fleeing enemies,
Banus in Aranick,
Will come to your herd village soon,
And kill your villagers.

"Banus did all manner if evil,
From South to North,
Kirgiz have suffered enough from his humiliation,
But they choked with silent fury.

"He had his own name,
He wants to be as bright as Banus lantern,
He asked others to call his Banus.
For this tyrant,
I have heard his cruelty.

"According to the words of passers-by,
He has a hundred thousand soldiers.
He has a general Duohan highly skilled in military drill,

He still has many other strong men under him.

"They are too heavy to carry by horses,
They have to ride camels to fight.
There are still many mountain-like giants.
If you fight with him,
Kirgiz will suffer much more.

"He will lead his troops to go out to battle,
He will trample on your herd village,
And destroy your town.
Who has the courage,
To be evenly matched with evil Banus?

"He is a powerful and strong enemy,
There is countless gold and silver in his storehouse.
He is shouting loudly,
And is planning an unprecedented battle.

"You should not chase the fleeing enemies,
But plan elaborately,
To protect your villagers at full blast.
'If enemies do not come on their own,
I will not launch an attack forwardly.'
You should keep it firmly in your mind!

"You are so wise,
I totally agree with you,
Before I leave this world.
Build up strength and guard our family and people,
Kill enemies dare come to invade,
This is the true quality of a hero.

"Run and fight around here and there,
Corner wealth in the time of war,
It will only be an ignorant action.
Man should be sober and adultly,

Then he can win every battle."

Heard Bakay's dissuasion,
Hero Manas gave the order to withdraw troops.
"We can not stay long here!"
They all mounted horses and returned back.

Where was Samurhan and his villagers?
Young people longed to return home.
Steeds desired the prairie,
Almost with their hooves flying to Samurhan.

Camels carried gold and silver,
Went in a orderly line,
Beautiful girls led by Naklai,
Followed the camels to the herd village.

Villagers did not know who she was,
And never heard of her.
Only Erchywuler and Showtu,
Knew the secret.

Among the girls Chuwak sent out,
There was Yernazar's only daughter Wurumhan.
Daughter was forced to take away by Shawruk,
And he was whipped by Shawruk too.
Beloved daughter was plundered by evil man,
He himself was beaten to be disabled,
He got wound in his heart never could heal.
He had to hide in a forest,
Suffered hunger in Aramutu suburb,
His days were on like years.

Manas mounted his throne,
He knew it from passers-by.
"My daughter was plundered by Shawruk!"
Yernazar came to redress the injustice,

But he saw his daughter in the herd village.

He was overjoyed when he saw his daughter,
He was too excited to say a word.
He looked like finding the treasure,
He was eager to talk to his daughter.

But he was scared Manas was the same as Shawruk,
He could not act rashly,
And could not tell his difficulties either,
But just walked in the village for six days with worry.

Young people did not know who he was,
And he did not dare to meet the elders.

Majik came together with Jagurp,
Was Karanuoyi's son.
It was just this Karanuoyi,
Was the neighbour of Yernazar,
Before he moved to Kambule.

In the herd village for six days,
He heard for three times,
That Jagurp Bayi's shouting:
"Where is Karanuoyi?"
The shouting made him excited.

Yernazar talked to himself:
"Who is this Nuoyi,
I must see him in person,
Whether he is just my neighbour?"

Garmgirchy, Berita and giant Bakay,
Tirkechy, Shihay and Kapchaque Bayi,
All these sainted rich men,
Gathered from all directions,
In Jagurp's yurt.

The elder Karanuoyi,
Was among them.

Yernazar wandered outside the door,
Nuoyi went out to the toilet,
Met him face to face.
Both of them were excited,
And embraced each other happily.
Kankor Manas happened to see,
Their action.

"Hero Majik! Stand up right now!
Please come and see.
Someone is talking to your father,
Exciting tears wet their gown.
You ask them to come in,
And we can know what happy thing happens?"

Majik did not dare to delay even a second,
When he got the order!
Erchywuler stood up,
And went out with Majik.
Two young warriors,
Lifted the door curtain up,
And came to the two elders.

Karanuoyi and Yernazar,
Still embraced each other,
And enjoyed the joy of reunion.
Hero Majik stood at their sides,
And greeted them.

Tears blurred the eyes,
Of Karanuoyi and Yernazar.
Nuoyi introduced to Yernazar:
"This is my son,
Companion of hero Manas,

He began to accompany our hero since he was seven."

"My dear father,
Lion Manas is waiting for you,
Please go in and meet him."
Majik said to them,
Then stepped aside.

They went to the front of Manas' yurt,
With their hands holding together warmly.
Karanuoyi found that,
Yernazar had already been hard to walk,
He was hesitated and did not dare to walk ahead.

Yernazar stopped his footstep,
And asked Nuoyi in low voice:
"Heard the name of Khan,
I am in great terror,
I went to Shawruk's palace twice,
It left me such hidden trouble."

Nuoyi was stunned speechless when he heard that,
He did not really understand Yernazar's trouble:
"You have me accompanied you,
Please feel relieved to go and meet our Khan."
The elder Nuoyi,
Went into the yurt liberally.

Forty warriors in the yurt,
Stood up and greeted them with respect.
They saluted the elders,
All with one voice.
Karanuoyi and Yernazar,
Returned a salute one by one.

Karanuoyi said excitedly,
Before he sat down:

"I was playing nine-marble chess just now,
And it was my turn to play.
But I need to go to the toilet,
And I met my neighbour at the moment.

"I can tell you his history,
His name is Yernazar.
When your father led his villagers,
Moved from Barikart,
To Kunse prairie,
He still stayed in Karakay.
Great tiger, you ask us to come to you,
Do you have any order to give us?"

"Since you have chess to play,
Since the game is very interesting,
Since he is the elder Yernazar,
Since you are bosom friends,
Please lead him to be a guest at each yurt,
And treat him warmly.

"Please report to my mother,
And give him a new clothes.
There will be no interest,
To lead him to be a guest with worn-out clothes."
Manas Khan made the arrangement for the elder,
He behaved with affection all the time.

Heard what Manas Khan said,
Yernazar's nervousness,
Began to quiet down,
A moved expression appeared on his face:
"Are you hero Manas?"
Yernazar admired Manas greatly.

Hero Manas said:
"Uncle Nuoyi,

If you have something urgent to do,
You can leave now but let him stay here.
I have many vacant rooms here,
To treat guests from far away to rest."

Nuoyi left the yurt,
And Yernazar stayed there alone.
He poured out his heart,
To Hero Manas,
He even shed his tears,
When he talked too sad.

Manas asked Erchywuler to take out the leather bag,
To pour horse milk wine to him.

"We can not let him be sad,
Please let him drink the horse milk wine."
Manas let Yernazar drink the wine,
Then let him talk slowly.

Hero listened to him in patience,
And heard that his daughter was in the herd village.
Before that,
Manas knew nothing about those girls.
He treated Yernazar in his yurt,
And served him with rare food.

He asked servant,
To get a new clothes from Qierdy,
A new clothes made him had a new look,
A lonely old men,
Got the respect of great hero.

"He is a Khan who really cares his people!"
This printed in his heart deeply.

Karanuoyi walked with flying feet,

Back to Jagurp's yurt hurridly,
All elders led by Bakay,
Were still there.
They were talking about,
Those captured girls.

"Let us have a look at Shawruk's daughter,
If she is beautiful enough,
We will let her marry Manas,
Manas has been grown up.
Jagurp Bayi,
Our hero is big enough to marry."

If Manas agreed,
They would make the decision,
And let Manas marry this beautiful girl.

It was right in the afternoon,
Each of them stepped out of the yurt,
To see those captured girls.
"Let the girls come out of the yurt,
We can watch them and do not let them notice.
It is not appropriate,
To scare them."

Before they finished watching the girls,
Manas and Yernazar had finished their talk.

"We need to talk to the hero,
Please let him condescend to come here."
Jagurp and Bakay,
Sent servant to invite the hero to come and discuss.

"Go ahead, let's go together!"
Heard the report of the servant,
The black mane wolf walked out of the yurt,
With Yernazar without any hesitation.

All the captured girls were beautiful,
Long skirts waved behind them.
Bright flowers were embroidered on the front of their dress,
Colourful patterns were embroidered on their collarbands.
They wore gorgeous and costly silk dresses,
Oversleeves on their hands were also very bright.

Pearls on them were shining,
Their tender faces were shining too.
Their bright eyes blinked,
Their charm made everyone's heart poppled.
"Do not treat them as captives."
Bakay had given clear ideas on it.

The girls had stayed for nearly one month,
Bakay tried to make them happy,
And never made them sad,
Let them wander in joy.
Bakdolet led fifteen beautiful girls,
And walked out.
He took the pretty girls,
Into the yard where the elders were waiting.

No matter men, women, the old or the young,
All opened their eyes wide.
All noble people and people knew custom clearly,
Gathered in the yard.

Naklai was as pretty as a goddess,
She was the best one among those girls;
People asked in secret and knew,
She was just fourteen years old.

Among these girls,
No one was ugly,
All them owned bright eyes.
All people did not response,

Except Yernazar,
His face had already covered with tears.

People led by Bakay,
All looked at him at a loss.
Yernazar talked in details,
To all others,
How he lost his daughter,
How he found her again.

Kirgiz eagle Kapchaque Bayi,
Had not found right girl for his son.
When he saw Yernazar's daughter Wurumhan,
He appreciated her beauty very much.
He decided by himself,
To make this girl marry his son.

Heard Yernazar's words,
He said immediately:
"You are old, and I am old and weak,
Karanuoyi is the same as us,
We three are similar.

"Please go with me, Yernazar,
Go to my yurt and taste my milky tea."
Nuoyi was his bosom friend,
Kapchaque invited them to his yurt.

All people there discussed and decided,
To let the beauty Naklai,
Marry hero Manas,
And be his wife.
The story hero manas,
Married Naklai,
Was spread widely.

The same age as Shawruk,

No matter the social status or martial skill,
He could be well-matched with Shawruk.
He was hero Tatay,
He had died,
The beauty Korboyin was his daughter,
She was still alive.

People knew Shawruk's name,
Then knew his daughter Naklai,
The most beautiful and virtuous girl,
Was this Korboyin.
She was chosen by people,
And sent to Chuwak's yurt.

Naklai married Manas,
Korboyin became Chuwak's wife,
And Wurumhan married Aji Bayi,
Three girls all got husbands,
And they were happy with their result.

All other girls stood in a line,
And waited there.
"Warriors without wives,
Should respect and modestly decline each other.

"Do not be in a thriving way,
And grab the girls.
Do not grab by your strength,
Just follow your feeling.

"If the girls agree,
You can marry them;
If the girls disagree,
You can not force them to marry you.

"Shawruk is a Khan,
He won the hearts of Karamark,

And came to this place Sari Arka.
All the beautiful girls he chose from all places,
Were as beautiful as flowers,
And have clever hands and good sense."

"Whether they will force us,
And make us sad with their strength."
The girls had such question at first,
But after they heard what the elder said,
They began to smile.

"Kirgiz are just and fair."
Girls felt all pleased.
No girl at presence,
Was desolate,
All of them found their right men.

Went and fought from east to west,
Defeated stubborn enemies and all conquered.
Under the shine of Manas,
Kirgiz welcomed their happy time again,
People lived calmly and peacefully.

When forty warriors felt lonely,
They went to hunt in forest to kill time.
Hunted goat and argali,
Looked for antelopes in wilderness,
Chased foxes in river valley,
And chased wolves on prairie.

They called their falcons,
To capture the hares on river rapids,
And capture pheasants in forest,
And caught plentiful fish and wild ducks,
In the vast lake.

In the cool shade of trees,

The youths played the game "Take Palace",
They whipped the horses to catch the goat,
And butchered horse colts to hold ceremony,
And taste the fragrant horse milk.

Strong men tied rope on their waists,
To compete their strength.
Young people divided into groups,
To play the game tug-of-war.

At places people gathered,
Watched around,
Near the lines of yurts,
At the door of each yurt,
There were orderly clay ovens,
Fresh meat was cooked in the woks.
Samur tea oven swirled smoke,
White yurts were as white as cloud in the sky.

All kinds of goods in the yurts,
Dazzled everyone's eyes.
Varied food was sumptuous,
Guests finished eating and left,
Sugar and honey were still on the tablecloth.

Someone put the iron wok on the clay oven,
And someone made wine from horse milk.
Kumuz player played the instrument,
The pleasing rhythm fluxed and refluxed.
Young boys and girls,
Sang their favourite folk songs loudly,
And evaluated the players at the same time.

Someone played six chapters[①],

① Six chapters: It is a big chapter in Kirgiz classical music.

Someone played Zigzag Path①.
Ten fingers and the nose were all used,
To show his skill.

Young girls crowded round their husbands,
And tidied their hair.
They were reluctant to show weakness,
They took out mouth-string organs.
They all rushed on to the front to play,
The beautiful music,
Was very pleasant to the ear.

The elders put lynx skin and wolf skin coats,
On the shoulders to keep warm.
Khans wore crown on their heads,
Khatuns②were all with splendid jewelries.

Boys wore pure gold belts,
Girls had lucky feathers on their head.
Four livestock wandered,
And spread all over the prairie.

When they moved to another prairie,
Colourful carpets and felt,
Were put on all the packs.

People wore the round leather caps on the skew,
Put fine saddles on their horses.
Erenchy sang,
As good as lark.

Girls and ladies stood in lines,
Sang in antiphonal style with full emotion.
Girls walked ahead with their waists twisted,

① Zigzag Path: A Kirgiz classical music.

② Khatun: Nomads in north China called their king "Khan", called their queen "Khatun".

To play on the swings.

Young men mounted untamed horse colts,
Ran fast to compete,
And to pick silver on horses.

Ceremonies of marrying and circumcision,
Were busy and alive in the herd village;
Invited guests to the ceremony,
And made all guests happy.
Horse race had lots of prizes:
"Where is my prize?"
There were always people shouted.

They held ceremonies when people died,
Guests came in succession,
Raised their hands and prayed for the dead.

Five people in a group,
To be guests and live in a yurt.
The elders gave out the orders,
And sent the youths to lead the guests.

"Horse race is going to start!"
Players made their steed sweat.
Horses ran on the prairie,
The audience criticized on horses.

Educated and reasonable people organized the race,
The youths with quick feet acted as servants.
Saintlike elders walked out their yurts,
And lied on their sides on the slopes.

Horse colts were in lines,
Food were in varied kinds.
All furniture were gathered together when they moved,
And led good camels to carry.

Those youths had their heads in the clouds,
Were blamed by elders severely.
Those naughty children,
Ran among the crowds.

There was happiness everyday,
There were ceremonies everyday,
People were all busy with enjoyment.
Spreading rumour would be punished,
Quarrel and fight,
Should apologize and compensate with certain mount of livestock.

Each Ayinla elder,
Persuaded and talked into them.
Let them make peace with each other,
Then watched them for a long time.

Guests from other places,
All behaved properly,
In the herd village.
No matter whose yurt they went to,
They were served very well.
Cheese spread fragrant, horse milk was mellow.
Horse neck creme was on the tablecloth,
Strong tea was still steaming hot.

Young ladies did not taste skin on boiled milk,
Old ladies even did not look at sheep tail creme.
The youth wore flowery clothes,
Made of colourful silk and brocade.

All kinds of livestock were full on prairie,
It was a prosperous time for Kirgiz.
Each household was well-fed and well-clothed,
Even the food spilled over the doorsill.
No matter the dead or the alive,
No one was richer than Jagurp.

All people immersed in the happiness,
And threw their suffering out of the sky.
Let Kirgiz live happily,
And we will put this story aside,
Let us talk about how fierce Badikoler,
Invaded Karmanap.

Badikoler Invaded Karmanap

There was a tribe called Mangat,
It matched with Karamark in power.
They had limited horses and soldiers,
But their leader Badikoler,
Was a fierce tyrant.

When Qingersh raised his battle banner high,
Led his troops to invade the west,
And plundered everywhere on their will,
Badikoler was a pioneer of the invaders.

Wherever their iron heels went,
People suffered too much.
Badikoler's cruel invasion,
Pushed Arashi people into the abyss of suffering.

Common people dominated by Karamark,
Wandered in sorrow and sadness.

Badikoler was a tyrant,
Like the burning sulphur;
The criminal fire burned everywhere,
Made the slaved people more miserable.

Baren and Shankay people,
Tajik and Karacha people,
And Tukuman territory,
Were all occupied by invaders.

Innocent common people were humiliated,
Tears coursed down their cheeks with desperation.

Badikoler was greedy of gain,
He plundered the property of Jedgair people,
Grabbed all the livestock of Hurosan people,
And drove them out of their homeland.

Karamark were master of their time,
Carried the gold of herdsmen away with their packs.
Such robbery happened not only one time or two times,
But happened every year.
No valuable things were left,
All were plundered by Karamark.

High-blown Badikoler,
Began to fix his eyes on Kirgiz.

Karakal Paker people were a branch of Kirgiz,
Karmanap was their leader.
Jagurp's daughter Kardhachy,
Was a rare heroine,
Two braids were as thick as the arms,
She had broad forehead, big and bright eyes,
Karmanap fell in love with her at first sight,
So he chose to marry her.

Badikoler contemplated,
The chance to invade him.
He planned to clean the tribes nearby up,
Then to invade Kirgiz.

"You must go right now,
To drive Karmanap's horses away."
He ordered forty cavalrymen,
With one following of each.
Then he recruited one hundred do-nothing scoundrels,

Totally one hundred and eighty people.
They flew to Karakal Paker tribe,
Like the flood and crazy monsters.

Karakal Paker had no great hero,
They could not stop their invasion.
Greedy invaders were afraid of nothing,
Once they met horses in the mountain,
They grabbed all the horses away.

Karmanap got the information,
And sent Aritky to inquire:
"Please go to visit Badikoler,
And return as soon as you get the information.

"Please tell Badikoler,
We are neighbours,
Why does he plunder our horses?
What way on earth,
Did we offend him?

"The tax every year,
We pay on time.
If they want to increase the tax,
We still can dissolve it through discussion.

"They send out their troops,
What is their reason to do so?
Tell Badikoler,
I am waiting for his exact answer."

The messenger whipped his steed,
And arrived at Badikoler's yurt soon,
Repeated Karmanap's words,
To Badikoler word to word.

Aritky had not finished his words,

Badikoler became angry and red-faced,
He scolded the messenger:
"Damned Karakal Paker people,
Dare not respect me!

"Each tribe in the west,
Submits to me unconditionally.
Hurosan and Jedgair,
Which can send people to inquire me.

"Karmanap dare to be so rampant,
Just because he has the backing Manas.
Jagurp's damned son Manas,
Stabbed famous Kontoy down the saddle,
And descended great disaster,
To Shawruk Khan of Karamark:
The forty girls in the palace,
Were also grabbed by him.

"Do not think he gets famous now,
And he is brother-in-law of Manas,
He can be on an equal footing with me.
He dare send the messenger,
To negotiate with me.
Fearless Karakal Paker people,
Made a wrong decision."

Badikoler turned round and gave orders to the generals:
"Generals, please mount your steeds,
And seize the chance,
To drive them out of our prairie."

Soldiers were in chaos,
And prepared for battle in a hurry.

Horse tails were tied up high,
Evil blood was running fast in the vessels.

Mangat people were eager for a fight,
To seize spoils of war.

Badikoler did not cover up his crankiness,
Said to Karmanap's messenger severely:
"You should go back now,
And tell your people,
That Badikoler will go to your place,
How powerful Karmanap is,
Please compete with me in battlefield.

"In order to occupy his place,
I grabbed his livestock.
I will cut his head off,
And drink his blood,
I will clear the way in the front,
And kill Manas,
To avenge Kontoy and Shawruk.

"I can not waste time here,
I am confused on a thing:
I got a news these days,
The poor Arokai,
Abandoned Nalun city,
And fled away like avoiding the death.

"He has so many good soldiers,
Why he is so timid now,
He even dare not turn his head,
Fled to Bozdoktur mountain.
He still can not make his decision,
To come back and avenge the death.

"Banus Khan and Duohan did not have too many soldiers,
They dare not fight with Manas.

"I will move secretly like the dipper,

I will be like the flying eagle,
Kill all the Kirgiz men,
Who dare to fight with me.

"I will wave my sabre and cut the head of Manas off,
Let his corpse lie in front of his horse.
I heard he married Shawruk's daughter,
I will grab her back to my side.
Let her be a servant to pick firewood and dung,
Let her suffer much as a widow.

"I will carry off all Kirgiz livestock,
I will prepare thousands of camels,
To carry back all the gold and silver,
Which was snatched by Manas.

"I will set my feet on all the land of Arashi,
To take their gold and silver away,
And capture self-glorifying Manas alive,
Let him be my servant.
I will come back to my camp,
With great joy of victory."

Badikoler screamed aloud,
Like a monster.

Karmanap's messenger,
Could not bear such shame.
Faced such an arrogant guy,
He did not want to stay one more second.
Heard the words that he could go,
He mounted his horse immediately,
Whipped his horse hard,
And unloosened the halter to let the horse run fast.

At the moment he rushed back,
The enemies began to act.

He did not delay any minute,
Ran as fast as he could.
He whipped his steed quickly,
Regardless of the horse.

He went with his steed day and night,
The edge of his gown waved in the wind.
He returned the herd village,
With his eyes opening wide and nervous.
He reported in details,
The words fierce Badikoler said.

Heard his messenger's report,
Karmanap felt worried:
"You went to Badikoler's camp,
Saw his fierce look,
And have nosed their evil secret.

"I will inform the villagers right now,
Try to transfer them into mountain.
I will call up all the soldiers,
Take heart of grace to fight with Badikoler.

"You follow my order now,
Leave for Samurhan.
I think you have known that,
Jagurp Bayi is my father-in-law.
Young hero Manas,
No one does not know his fame.

"You should remember all my words clearly,
Then report to Manas word by word.

"Tell him his brother-in-law Karmanap says these to him,
Tell him Manas is the cause of the issue.
Tell him Badikoler has plundered us,
Tell him his brother-in-law has lost trust on him.

Tell him I had peaceful life in the past,
Because of you, Manas,
We suffer such misfortune.

"You tell him you are the person,
Who took message to Badikoler;
Tell him all the words,
You heard in Badikoler's camp.

"If he is reluctant to dispatch his troops,
You just ask him whether he has forgotten feelings of kinship.
Does he remember, among Karakal Paker,
He has a sister Kardhachy.

"Tell him his sister and brother-in-law are in trouble,
Tell him Badikoler is furious and put on airs.
Tell him his brother-in-law,
Is keeping quiet out of fear.

"Manas should save his sister first,
Then he can be pleasant and composed.
If Manas can not save his sister,
He is not worthy of the name young hero.
If he does not come this time,
Let Karakal Paker's salt① punish him.

"I need not say so much,
You just tell my current condition to him in details.
If he can come, let him set out right away,
With his troops,
Let him lead the well known hero,
To trample all the enemies down.

"Tell him Badikoler come to invade,
Like the flood,

① let salt punish: When Kirgiz swear, they always say "whoever does not keep the promise, let salt punish him." They thought salt could punish the people who could not keep the promise.

Like the storm which could blow the yurt away;
Tell him that arrogant Badikoler,
Is much more murderous than Kontoy and Shawruk."

Karmanap finished his words,
And sent Aritky to set out right away.

Aritky mounted fine steed,
Went along the north side of Betbark mountain,
And Bedirly Alkali beach,
He went quickly under the cover of night.

He mounted the gray steed,
Which was hero Karado's steed,
Karado was Karmanap's brother;
Fine steed with a best rider was like a flying arrow,
Aritky whipped his steed day and night.

He dashed ahead fast,
At Ahechy of Buhara,
A group of people came in his face,
They came across suddenly.
Aritky did not know who they were,
So he was worried,
Then he asked their names.

The other side responded immediately:
"Shatmir is my name,
Beautiful Buhara town is our hometown.
You rushed forward regardless of your steed,
Where are you from and who are you?
You are so scared,
Tell me, where do you come from?
Please tell me your name,
Do not want to hide anything.
By the way,
Tell us your leader's name."

Aritky did not stop,
But still whipped his steed on the bottom,
He answered in a hurry:
"I am hurried on my way,
But you asked me to answer so many things.

"Betbark mountain is our hometown,
Karakal Paker is our tribe;
Karmanap is our Khan,
He administers well.
Our livestock,
Are on the prairie freely.

"Mangat hero Badikoler,
Was well known in the world.
It is just this Mangat,
Plundered our horses at his will.

"I received the order to negotiate with him,
But he blamed me and cursed me.

"He said he will take away all our livestock,
Made our prairie empty;
He said he would grab everything in Arashi,
Even a grass would not be left.

"He said he would clear the way in the front,
Then dispatch his troops;
He said he would let Jagurp's son Manas,
Pay the debt of blood,
Of Kontoy and Shawruk back.

"He said Kirgiz are aggressive recently,
He would let us experience his power;
He said he would cut Manas' head off,
In order to dispel his worry.

"He said he will turn Manas' throne over,
At the presence of everyone.
He swears to drive livestock on the prairie away,
And chop down all apple trees in the garden.

"He said he will fight their way to Kangayi mountain,
And conquer all the tribes.
He will descend the disaster to the world,
Let night cover all even the living way.

"He will grab Shawruk's daughter Naklai,
From the hand of Manas,
Let her live miserably as a widow.
He said Karmanap and Manas Khan,
Are relatives by marriage,
He will let them quarrel with each other,
And begin to hate each other.

"He talked nonsense,
Like a wild boar;
He is like a mad boar,
No one can bear his arrogance.

"I rush forward as fast as I can,
To ask Manas for help,
With the order of Karmanap.
I will report the details to Manas,
Then return immediately.
This is all the information,
I must go and can not delay any minute."

Shatmir heard all Aritky's words,
He felt surprised:
"The hero can match well with Badikoler,
Where can we find such warrior?

"Karamark killed by Manas,

If compared with Badikoler,
They are nobody.
I can not waste your time,
Please go ahead quickly!"

In order to convey the news as soon as possible,
Aritky did not take pity on his steed;
The gray steed ran like the whirlwind,
It was drenched in sweat.

Aritky was busy with journey,
Sand rose up covered half of the sky.
He arrived at the edge of Ayinla,
The hounds barked ceaselessly.

Manas was at home at the moment,
His guests went and came in succession.

A warrior ran up to him,
And helped him climb down the horse.
When they saw a stranger coming,
Servants held the door curtain for him.

Aritky walked forward slowly,
And strode over the doorsill.
The yurt was very tidy inside,
Forty warriors sat on both sides.

Aritky went into the yurt,
People opened their eyes with questions.

Aritky was nervous,
And blamed himself:
"Why I come in so rudely,
To such outstanding generals,
I have never acted this way before."

Right at the moment,
He saw Manas sit in the yurt.
Let us listen carefully,
How Aritky opened his words.

He spoke with a shaking voice,
But his tongue was stiff.
No one seized him by throat,
But he felt his throat was blocked.
His face was pale and eyes were dim,
Because he was too tired.

Seeing this,
Manas thought and did not ask him right away:
"Warriors,
Please send the guest to my father's yurt,
You can inquire him,
When he recovers."

Messenger Aritky,
Was sent to Jagurp's yurt.
Right at that moment,
Giant Bakay came in.

Bakay found the guest passed out,
Then he asked servant to wake him with cold water,
Let him be recovered gradually,
Then asked him to tell his intension.

Heard the name of Kardhachy,
Jagurp Bayi shouted with great worry,
Qierdy cried out loudly,
Neighbours gathered in front of the yurt to inquire the news.

Bakay Khan felt worried,
Black mane wolf Manas felt painful in his heart.
Manas asked servants to saddle the horses,

And make preparation to go out to battle at all times.

There were thirty strong servants,
They served in the yurt.
Heard the malicious remarks of the enemies,
Kirgiz were all in tumult.

Jagurp Bayi asked servant,
To lead out his steed and saddle it.
"My child Kardhachy,
Are you safe and healthy?
My poor son-in-law Karmanap,
Has all your wealth been grabbed?"

He was afraid of the power of Manas,
Dare not say he wanted to go.
He was busy,
With all the preparations;
The life of his daughter and son-in-law,
Made him in deep distress and worry.

At this point,
Manas told his worry to Bakay in secret:
"Bakay Khan, do you know,
Why my father is so worried?
If he really has the courage,
Why he was expelled to Altay,
Far away from families and relatives?

"When my sister Kardhachy came back home,
He would win the respect,
If he led the camels,
In the name of giving dowry.

"My respectful uncle,
Please dissuade him,
If he goes with me today,

It must be my shame.
My parents are crying,
I do not want to see their sadness.

"Thought about my sister's fate,
I can not be reluctant any more.
The powerful enemies,
Must chase hard step by step.

"At the moment of truth,
My father can not go with me,
He can not bear the hardship of the journey,
When can we go,
I will arrange the right time.

"When I quench the flames of war,
When the vital force comes to their prairie again,
My parents can go with me then,
To visit their daughter and son-in-law."

When Manas finished his words,
Bakay walked to the front of Jagurp slowly,
And said to him sincerely:
"Jagurp Bayi, please listen to me,
What kind of thing bothers you so much?

"Our children have grown up now,
They can bear all the things.
Sister and brother-in-law are plundered,
Manas Khan will not turn a blind eye,
He must whip his steed for fight.

"Extremely arrogant Karamark,
Dare not show themselves;
All-conquering Kontoy and Shawruk,
Were all stabbed off the saddles;
Arokai fled from Nalun in panic,
Who else dare trample on our prairie.

"Our hero Manas,
His fame spread all over the east.
Do not follow him tightly,
Like the idiots.
If the old and weak all follow him,
Would not that be criticized by the world?

"If you really want to visit your daughter and son-in-law,
You can go when the song of victory rises.
Then you go to visit your families,
With your wife,
How proud you will be at that moment.
If you act as rash as the youth,
It does not meet your status.

"We will go out to battle soon,
I come on purpose to discuss with you.
We will set out from here,
And make a hurried journey without stop,
The destination is right in front of our eyes,
A hard fight will happen right away.

"The messenger sent by Karmanap,
Is a warrior called Aritky.
He talked ceaselessly,
The inhumanity and ferocity of Badikoler.
Manas has already been wild with rage,
He can not let Badikoler act violently.

"Please pray for Manas,
We will set out right now."

Jagurp Bayi continued the talk:
"I can understand you completely,
It seems we will have a fierce battle.
I have to respect the will of my child,
And give up this journey.

"I do not know how is the fate,
Of my child Kardhachy now?
Please tell her carefully,
Do let her think I dare not go to see her,
And then hate me."

Jagurp stayed at home unhappily,
Heroes went out to battle.

Forty warriors accompanied Manas,
Bakay Khan also followed tightly;
Red banner waved in the wind,
Great heroes dashed ahead,
Toward Betbark mountain.

Remembered the suffering of his sister Kardhachy,
Manas felt worried and angry:
"The tribe of Karakarl Paker,
Does not have good fate now.
Aritky, please go back now,
And tell them the news,
At least they will feel a little better."

Manas Rescued Karakal Paker

On the vast prairie of Buhara,
And the edge of Ahechy,
There was a Arakler lake,
With wild ducks and geese swimming in it.

The administrator of Buhara town,
Was a Khan called Karahan.
The three brothers,
Were all Adbai's offspring.

During Onuzdo's time,
There were three rich men,
Left their hometown,
And wandered about for living.

Adbai had three sons,
The oldest one was Karahan,
The youngest one was Shatmir,
The second one was Timirhan.

All three of them were Khans,
They were well known around the world.
Especially brave Karahan,
Was the most famous one.

Karahan's eldest daughter Akerkechy,
Was a rare beauty in the world.
Aydarhan's son Kokcher,
Married her.

His another daughter Kanikai,
Was grown up in Timirhan's home,
She was clever and virtuous.
All the people knew,
She was Karahan's daughter.

Karahan's daughter Kanikai,
Was just thirteen years old.
She led forty maidservants,
Played happily,
At the side of Arakler lake.

Jagurp's son Manas,
Arrived at Arakler lake,
On his way to Mangat.
Warriors whipped their horses hard,
Rose dust up high.
Ayikoler came soon afterwards,
With great dignity.

Manas watched aside,
And found a beautiful girl.
"Where are these girls from?"
The hero held his halter curiously.

Jagurp's happy prince,
Was twenty years old at the moment.
Seeing from his face, his eyes were amorous;
His florid face was shining,
With irresistible charm.

The hero appeared suddenly,
The girls were all surprised.
The hero's outstanding figure,
Was printed in Kanikai's heart.

In front of the girls,

The hero raise his right leg,
Put on the mane of Arckura steed,
Took out his white date wood pipe,
And smoked it.
He narrowed his eyes,
And watched the girl carefully.

He took a fancy to Kanikai secretly,
A mysterious feeling rose from his heart;
He did not show his intension,
Turned his horse round and went on his journey.

The hero came and went in a haste,
The girls played at the side of the lake,
Did not know who he was at all.
His outstanding appearance,
Stirred all girls' hearts.

Karahan's daughter Kanikai,
Became silent after that,
She was with a heavy heart.
"He is really a great hero,
Without any fault.
Magic Arckura steed,
Matches him very well.

"Any girl married him,
Will be happy forever.
He is in the prime of his life,
With full of youthful spirit.
He is the proud of all men,
Who will not love him?

"I heard there is a hero,
He cares for the lives of all Kirgiz,
He plans to liberate Kirgiz from the oppression,
Is he right that hero?

"He appeared and went away suddenly,
Does he love anyone among us?
If I can be his wife till the end of my life,
It will be my best fortune.

"People all praise him,
He links his heart closely with all people.
If anyone suffers in disaster,
He is the hero saves all people.
Kirgiz wandered about everywhere,
Will take him as the saviour.

"His breadth of mind is as broad as the vast prairie,
As turbulent as the lake water,
And as high as the mountain.

"Faces the fierce enemies like vipers,
He acts like the burning fire;
To his homeland and families,
He has deep affection.

"Even his achievements could shake the mountain,
He forgets all soon;
Even his achievements are deep as the ocean,
He is never inflated with pride;
Even if he kill the enemies,
He is also quiet and calm.

"No matter happy or sad,
He can bear all the time.
Enemies dare fight with him,
All lose their lives in his hand.

"Play with him,
Will let people forget to go back;
Anyone who turns into his foe,
Will lose their life.

"No matter east or west,
People will lower their heads to show their obedience;
The eighteen layers universe,
Can be overturned easily by him.

"Enemies fought with him,
Even wormed their way into earth,
He also can pull them out;
Even if there is violent floodwater,
He can fend it off composedly.

"He can sleep with his eyes open,
No matter who becomes his foe,
They all die under his knife.
He is a bloody hero,
He can make clear spring water into blood;
He is a great hero,
Make enemies hopeless and despaired.

"He is wise enough,
There will be no one matched him,
When he is in his prime time."

Kanikai looked the hero up and down,
And felt perturbed.
She stood at the side of the lake silently,
The heroic bearing of the hero casted in her heart.

Black mane wolf Manas went forward,
His mind was also in a mess.
Forty warriors went with him,
Along Betbark slope.

Let us stop this passage,
To talk about how villain Badikoler,
Invaded Karmanap.

Vampire Badikoler wore the iron helmet,
And layers of armours,
Stretched his evil hands toward Karakal Paker.

Carried all kinds of weapons,
The earth shook under the horse hooves,
It made Karmanap sorrow,
They continued to go forward,
And planned to plunder Arashi.

They planned to kill the pillar of Arashi,
And kill Manas.
They humiliated Kirgiz people,
And tried in vein to kill them all.

According to his previous evil practice,
He would forcibly occupy beautiful girls and married ladies.
He was ambitious and acted on his own way,
And started the battle.

This guy led his troops to the battle,
People were greatly afflicted;
He met Tukuman people on his way,
Killed them mercilessly like cut the weeds.

"Badikoler has come."
All Karakal Paker people resisted.
Karado could not find suitable battle horse,
He felt worried.

Right at the moment,
Aritky whipped his steed and returned his camp:
"Young Manas is on his way now!"
The news was spread all over the Ayinla.

Karakal Paker and Mangat,
Troops of two sides pitched the camps and confronted.

Gray horse was back to his hand,
Karado mounted the horse and held his sabre tightly,
Wanted to make great achievement,
And win the honour of warrior.
He stood in the front of the troop alone,
Showed his great power.

Badikoler went to fight,
Without any hesitation,
Both of them shouted and began to fight.

Faced murderous enemy Badikoler,
Karado lost his confidence in fear,
The point of his spear did not stab the object.
Badikoler fought Karado,
Made Karado tired with running about.

After two rounds fight,
Karado had lost his presence of mind,
Karmanap could not bear any more,
He went into battle in person.

Badikoler took all his courage,
When he saw Karmanap;
He held his spear tightly,
And knocked the belly of his horse to his enemy.

Through three rounds fight,
He fought more and more severely.
Karmanap was defeated,
He lost half of his courage.
When he was returning his camp,
Karado turned round his steed,
And came out to help from aside.

Seeing Karado's figure,
Ferocious Badikoler,

Was wild with rage:
His face was blue with anger,
He took out his spear and opened his eyes wide,
And wiped Karmanap,
And Karado off their horses.

At this critical moment,
Kardhachy coiled his pigtail on his head.
"Karmanap's head will be cut off,
Karado will also suffer disaster."

She mounted Jarimkok steed,
The black steed,
Was presented by his father Jagurp.
She whipped her steed to the battlefield,
Risked her life to fight Badikoler.

That guy opened his eyes wide with great fear,
Kardhachy seized the chance to stab his spear out.
Badikoler's steed bent its forelegs,
And nearly fell over.

Self-glorifying Badikoler,
Was with his dignity in the dust.
He took heart of grace,
But frowned and bursted into a fury.

Karmanap and Karado,
Fled from the battlefield and saved their life.
Badikoler and Kardhachy,
Two strong opponents made the mountain shook.
They concentrated on fighting,
And well-matched after several rounds.

Badikoler talked to himself:
"This heroine,
Waved his pigtail in the air,

I will catch her pigtail in my hand,
And throw her off the saddle.
Drag her after my horse,
And take her back to be my wife.

"She is well-matched with me,
She is really a great heroine;
If I let her bear me a son,
He must be a great hero.

"Send her back to Barik town,
All people will be surprised;
I will tame her to be my wife,
Let her serve me obediently.

"Karmanap and Karado,
I will settle with them.
I will let Karakal Paker,
Be my dependency.

"Then I will go forward,
And get even with Kirgiz,
Let Manas be sad,
Then take his life away mercilessly."

Badikoler aimed at the moon,
Was happy like finding a wonderful idea;
He turned round his head,
And dashed ahead to the battlefield.

Young Manas came at the moment,
He saw this on the top of the mountain,
He whipped his magical steed Arckura.
He shouted his name "Manas",
Came at his enemy like an eagle.

Heard the name "Manas",

Kardhachy held her halter,
Turned round and left the battlefield.
"I can not continue to show off here,
'Contend the enemy with my younger brother!'
I can not bear such shame."
Kardhachy was very wise,
She considered comprehensively.

"My spoil of war is away for your coming,
I am ready to look for you,
It is a great luck for me,
That you come by yourself."
Badikoler shouted loudly,
The spear in his hand whizzed in the air.

A gust of wind blew over,
Long hair on his back neck waved like the reed;
His teeth were gritted and rattled,
The roar resounded to the skies;
He held a forty-span spear,
And he was without equal in strength.

He took all his courage,
And noticed his dangerous condition,
So stabbed toward Manas severely,
With all his strength.
When Manas warded off his spear,
The spear broke in half and dropped from his hand.
But black mane wolf Manas was absolutely still,
He acted as easy as the wind blew over grass.

Badikoler changed another spear,
He encouraged himself,
And charged to Manas again.

The black mane wolf did not show any flurry,
He warded off his enemy's spear easily,

And attacked his enemy immediately.
The wildly arrogant boar,
Was stabbed severely.
The spear was crooked but not broken,
Badikoler was not hurt seriously.

Hero Manas took all his energy,
Aimed at his enemy and pricked his spear again.
But the point of the spear did not pierce through the armour,
And the enemy was not hurt.

That guy was as solid as the rock,
The world was so magical.

Badikoler was angry after he was pricked twice,
His blowzy beard sticked together.
He raised up the huge battle-ax,
No one could resist his vigour.

Anyone who was cracked by the ax,
Would pound into the earth.
When the ax cracked the mountain,
It would become powder immediately.

He waved his battle-ax,
And cracked the hero in the face.
"No armour could keep him save at this part",
Hero Manas observed in secret,
And seized the opportunity immediately.
Noticed the rising arm of Badikoler,
He stabbed to Badikoler.

The spear stabbed to Badikoler's oxter,
Pierced it through.
The blood like the running water,
Flew along Badikoler's arm.

Black mane wolf Manas continued the triumphant pursuit,
Turned round and stabbed his enemy one more time.
The point of spear aimed at Badikoler's oxter,
And pierced through his chest.

The lion went round his enemy,
And twisted his spear in the hand ceaselessly.
Under his great power,
Mountain would be pierced through by him.

Mountain-like Badikoler,
Fell off his steed.

Forty warriors were ready in full battle array,
Did not let any enemy flee away.
All enemies wanted to flee,
Were captured or killed.

No innocent soldiers were pursued,
Children and the old in the army,
And the soldiers forced to fight in the battle,
Were all driven to a corner of the battlefield.

According to the traditional rule,
Hero Bakay faced his fellows,
And expressed his idea:
"Hero Manas,
You have defeated your enemies,
Let me deal with,
The rest things.

"All Mangat people at presence,
Your Khan Badikoler has died,
Although you have lost your general,
You can not flee away for yourself,
You should listen carefully to my words.

"It is Khan administered the common people,
If the Khan is judicious and kindhearted,
His people will have happy life.
Lighten exorbitant tax levis,
He can get the support of his people.

"In the time of Badikoler's administration,
Who was the minister cruelly injured the people,
Who was Beik led troops go to battle,
Please do not hide and tell me clearly.

"Who are from Baran,
And who come from Shankay?
I will make all these things clear,
You should tell me in details.
You can not hide the truth from me,
And can not talk rubbish either.
Divide Shankay, Baran and Mangat people,
Into three groups and separate with each other."

Those people were divided into three groups,
Baran, Shankay had more people,
But the officials were all Mangat people.

There were no Mangat people,
Among the common soldiers.
Giant Bakay watched carefully,
Kirgiz were the most unfortunate.

"What a fluky world,"
It came true.
The world was hard to detect,
It just took turns all the time.

"Mangat people stay here,
Baran and Shankay people act right now,
To take back the livestock grabbed by Badikoler,

And get them together.

"No matter the dead or the alive,
You should extend the same treatment to all;
Especially to women and children,
Can not speak rudely either."

Baran and Shankay people left,
And returned back immediately.
"If we do not act as his will,
He will drink up our blood."

They obeyed the order completely,
Made the livestock on the prairie,
Gather on the slope,
And divided the livestock into groups,
According to the different marks on them,
Then let all people surround to watch.
The livestock of Karakal Paker,
Had returned to Karmanap to drive back the herd village.

Mangat people were down on their luck,
Ladies cried sadly,
With tears covering on their faces.

Karakal Paker and Baran people,
Mixed with Shankay people,
Drove countless livestock and left.
They climbed over Basalik peak,
And pitched their camps in Mangat.

Baran people who were humiliated,
Shankay people who had lost freedom,
Were happy after they were liberated by the hero.
Shankay and Baran people,
Got their freedom again forever.
A lot of girls were grabbed,

To Badikoler's palace,
Girls had relatives were taken away,
Rest of the girls,
Were arranged by Shatmir.

Shatmir went in person,
And chose carefully in the palace,
Then he took out one girl,
With no one noticing that.

Shatmir led the girl,
And let Karahan raise her.
Kanikai liked that girl very much,
They got along well with each other.

For Badikoler's wife,
Hero Manas did not inquest her more,
"Behave yourself and live honestly,
You will have enough wealth to enjoy your life."
The lion finished his words,
And was ready to be on his return journey.

"Shankay people are in remote place,
Baran people live together with them,
And get along with each other very well,
From now on they will be more harmonious."

Badikoler's wife instructed her servants,
To send lots of horses to the hero,
In order to let the hero not go back empty-handed.
"Why does not Manas leave the horses to us?"
Karmanap was not happy on this,
And Kardhachy either.

Young Manas returned his hometown,
And lived his happy life again.

On a cool evening,
The news came urgently.

Let us put this aside,
And tell another legend,
Of Manas Khan.

Four Aranick Stubborn Enemies Invaded Kokcher

Manas suppressed the battle,
Rested at home comfortably.

On one evening,
A messenger whipped his horse and came fast,
With a pale face:
"Kokcher sent me here to report to you,
Banus in Aranick is ready to make trouble,
Duohan works hand in glove with him.

"Sokso and Sotoy,
Are generals as fierce as lions,
They wave the battle banner in the air,
Lead strong troops hard to bear by the earth,
Come like the flood.

"The war drum is beating and the horn is sounding,
Like countless ants creeping forward,
Like the mountain flood blowing up.
They grab horses away,
From the hands of people,
In Yichkarkra and Kokdob hillock,
In Dakemin and Jeteoguz prairie.

"We do not have enough soldiers,
To be evenly matched with them,
To risk our lives to fight,
And we can not take our livestock back.

"They occupy and administer the west,
And begin the siege to the north;
He wantonly slaughters us,
And wants to kill us all.

"We abandon our wealth and livestock,
Abandon our yurts lived many generations,
And hide in the forest and valley.
The kids in the cradles,
Were carried by us in secret without letting them cry;
The old lie in their yurts,
Were carried away with their bedcloth.

"Common people wander from place to place,
They have nothing but skins and bones;
Lost their warm yurts,
People suffer hunger in the cold wilderness.

"Great lion, please listen carefully,
Kokcher sent me to ask for your help,
Our people are looking forward to seeing you,
Once they get good news from you,
We will all move to your place.

"Arashi suffered disasters,
Are waiting for you like night is waiting for the morning star.
We are burning with anxiety,
To wait for your response."

Respectful Kirgiz Khan,
Wise elders,
Strong warriors,
And all-conquering knights,
Were all listening carefully.

Their hearts were covered by the haze,
They felt sad of Kokcher's suffering;

The black mane wolf broke the ice first,
Said to the messenger:

"Messenger, please go back,
And convey every of my word to your leader.
It is Thursday tomorrow,
I absolutely will not go out to battle.
If Kazakh people have set out,
We will join in Aranick.

"Banus and Duohan,
Sokso and Sotoy,
I have heard their vice more than once,
I want to see by myself,
How powerful they are.

"Common people suffer the great disaster,
How can I just stand by at home?
If you return, please go right now,
And do not delay any second."

The messenger turned round and disappeared in dusk,
The light of Thursday morning pushed the night back.
Ayikoler Manas, hero Bakay,
Lion Chuwak, Kerlgelchal,
Mounted forty horses which were as tidy as the awn,
They went shoulder to shoulder,
It was the right time to set out.

The heroes descended disaster to enemies,
The soldiers rolled up their sleeves for battle,
The warriors fought with enemies regardless of their danger,
Whipped their steeds toward Aranick.

The troop rested and reorganized for three days,
In Budurg mountain;
They chased and hunted the wild deer in the forest,

And shot elks on the plains.

Kokcher's messenger,
Whipped his steed hard day and night,
As fast as wind,
And returned his camp soon;
He reported to Kokcher Khan,
All the things in details.

People gathered around them,
Heard the news from Manas.
Kokcher and Kazakh Khan Yurb,
Called up their generals and soldiers right away.

"Friends should be like this."
A ray of comfort stirred in their hearts.
Yurb Khan accompanied by hero Kokcher,
They led the vast and mighty troop,
Moved like a great flood,
Along the bumpy roads,
Went forward fast without a stop,
Toward the direction Manas pointed.

Yurb Khan and Kokcher's troops,
Had more than ten thousand soldiers and horses;
There were no old people in the troops,
There were only strong young men.
And they would join with Manas,
On Budurg hillock.

Kazakh and Kirgiz joined forces triumphantly,
They laughed and chatted cheerfully.
Generals and soldiers like the burning flames,
Encouraged each other as siblings.

Like the autumn wind could blow leaves off,
They sounded the horn and beat the battle drum.

The hooves of horses clopped,
Which made the earth shook,
And made the grass broken into half.
The battle steeds stood with heads high and chests out,
As powerful as thunderbolts.

The long troops could be seen,
On Burulus hillock.
The warrior held the battle banner high,
Walked in front of the troops.

There were four heroes,
In Aranick city,
Two were Khans and the other two were generals,
And there were another ten warriors with great strength.

Guards were close at their sides,
They were like ferocious wolves,
And were ready to start off,
To go at Kazakh and Kirgiz.

In six towns and Aranick,
They collected tax and built up energy,
Made preparation for plundering Kazakh and Kirgiz.

Two generals Sokso and Sotoy,
Two Khans Duohan and Banus,
Were ready to fight like the arrow on the bow.

Right at the moment,
A sentry came in hurry and fear:
"Duohan, hero Banus,
Both you are great Khans;
Sokso and Sotoy,
You two are more exalted than Khan.

"On Budurg hillock,

The dust rose into the sky,
A troop with banner holding high appeared from the dust;
We let the person with second sight watch carefully,
And we have seen clearly all their things.

"The troops are like the bursting blood,
With a lot of heroes who can smash the world.
They hold iron axes as big as yurts,
Their eyes shine as the morning star.
They gnashed their teeth hard,
Like the lions.
Heroes from everywhere gather together,
All of them are imposing and awe-inspiring.

"All-conquering warriors come,
With black armours on them,
Hang long bows and arrows on,
And hold the firelocks on their shoulder.

"They are not nobodies,
Like unshakable mountains.
Even if we fight with them for twelve months,
We do not necessarily win the victory.

"The blue battle banner and red square banner,
Are waving in the wind as the weeds;
Clops of horses deafen the ears,
The sound of voices can tremble the earth.

"When we hear that,
We are scared to death.
The earth like water in the lake,
Shakes ceaselessly and makes everyone scary.

"There is a great hero,
He can crumb everything into powder,
We guess but still do not who he is.

"The rest things,
Two Khans administer the common people,
Two generals and ten warriors,
Please judge by yourselves."

Heard the sentry's report,
Khans and generals were too impatient to wait,
They ordered the troops to set out.
Drums and horns sounded together,
All soldiers started off and left no one,
Camps were all dismantled and packed.

Kangayi felt panicky,
When they saw the figure of hero Manas,
They were scared to speak;
Although they had not met the hero,
They were eager to flee for their lives.

Two Khans, two generals,
And ten warriors,
Led thousands of soldiers,
Shouted loudly to encourage themselves.

Kangayi people came in great number,
Like the sky was bolted out,
These reckless guys,
Gnashed their teeth in hatred.

Gritted the teeth and bit the lips to bleed,
Evil fire burned in their eyes,
More people groaned inwardly,
And felt desperate at the fear.

Earthshaking Aranick Battle

A person called Kaldalan,
Rushed out from the camps of Kangayi first,
To the battlefield in a threatening manner.
Tartekzl battle steed under his hips,
Was intrepid to fight.

Kazakh hero Saimat,
Was matchless in strength and martial skill,
Fought with enemies for many times,
And stamped them all under the hooves of his steed.

He never retreated in the face of death,
With majestic demeanour,
A Karasur horse① was his mount,
A long spear with pine handle was sharp.
Kazakh hero Saimat,
Rushed toward Kaldalan directly.

Villain Kaldalan charged forward,
With a murderous look like a hungry tiger;
The spears met together,
The sound was like wolves howled.

The soldiers waited out of the battlefield,
Waved the battle banner high and shouted;
Two heroes Kaldalan and Saimat,
Fought with each other with sweat pouring down their backs.

① Karasur horse: It is a black and gray horse.

They seized the chance,
And dashed forward to each other;
An earthshaking battle,
Drew back its curtain.

Both of them were warriors experienced hundreds of battles,
They pricked each other and warded off the other's spear;
The clothes were pricked into pieces,
Shields were off and kept it out with leather coats,
Their cheeks were cut with pieces of scars,
Which were bleeding down the faces.

After fighting dozens of rounds,
Hero Saimat was more and more brave.
He tried to look for the opportunity,
To show his great power.

His spear pierced through his enemy's lung,
A gust of blood spurted out.
Saimat pricked his rival down the horse with his spear,
And then cut the rival's head off quickly.

Saimat brought his rival's head back,
Yurb was the Khan,
So he must present the head to the Khan.

Saimat was proud of his victory,
He sat on the back of his horse with great satisfaction,
Red brocade gown was on him,
Like the tiger ready to jump.
Hero Saimat glared like a tiger,
Enemies' movements were all in his eyes.

Famous warrior Munar,
Was one of the top ten warriors in Aranick.
His steed was an iron black steed,
He was the famous Tursayak magical steed,

The warriors were as heavy as a mountain on the steed.

Once he did wrestling with rivals on horses,
He acted like the whirlwind.
All rivals pricked down the horses by him,
No one could escape from dying.
He was a famous general,
His illustrious name spread round whole Kangayi.

When Kangayi people saw Munar going for fighting,
They all were happy to shout and jump:
"Mount the iron black magical steed,
Munar will be all-conquering.
Look at his mountain-like figure,
All enemies will be scared of him.

"Self-glorifying Kazakh people,
Must flee in panic.
If they are self-willed and showed off,
He must prick them off the horses one by one.

"The death of Kaldalan,
Will descend on Saimat himself soon.
Munar must cut his chest open,
And twist his head off like a chicken,
And throw his bones on the ground,
Let it fly over like the wool in the air.

"Munar is like an upstanding tree,
How can he bear others to show off in front of him?
Brave Munar calls up all his courage,
He must puncture his enemies' livers and take out their gall bladders,
To satisfy his own desire."

Kangayi people shouted and wrangled,
Glared their rivals with their eyes open;
This damned guy,

Made everyone see him surprised;
"His mount is like a great tower,
His head can reach the cloud when he is on the saddle."

"I will avenge Kaldalan,
Let Kazakh people's blood ran.
Beside Saimat,
I will kill all people at presence.
No one of them could be alive,
They will try in vain to escape."

He had great power,
And his steed was unusual too,
His dense hair was plaited,
And his two thick eyebrows were like two sheep slept there.

Held sixty-span spear in the hand,
The shouting was earthshaking like the thundering,
He had a prevailing thirst of blood,
And was ready to attack Saimat.

Saimat's mount Karasur steed,
Was a swift horse which ran like flying.
Heroes fought with Saimat,
All failed to escape from his hand.

He shouted loudly the name "Manas",
With the dust high in the air.
Karasur steed went a thousand miles a day,
Put up its ears and galloped.

Munar held his spear tightly in his hand,
Stabbed Saimat's chest directly.
Saimat went through the danger with ease,
And said to himself:
"His spear is too long,
If compared with my spear.

Before I prick him,
Maybe I have been on the point of his spear."

He put his spear back to the front of the saddle,
His sharp sabre was hanging on his side;
He grasped the handle of the sabre,
And took it out of the sheath immediately.

Munar pricked to him with the long spear,
Hero Saimat warded with his sabre,
And cut the spear off with the point flying aside.
Saimat waved his sabre,
Before Munar made a turn,
A streak of cold light swept over his head.

Utterly discomfited Munar,
Took the big battle hammer,
His hair stood up like a hedgehog.
The yurt-size battle hammer,
Made too many rivals feel terrified.
Seeing boar-like ferocious face of Munar,
People all went as white as a sheet.

Saimat spared no effort to fight without any fear,
Frenzied Munar raised his hammer high,
And pounded to Saimat severely.
Before the hammer fell on him,
Saimat had got the idea in his mind:
"I will prick his arm,
And make the hammer fall from his hand."

Saimat waved his spear,
And the point stabbed Munar's right arm.
Munar pulled his arm back right away,
The spear was gone from Saimat's hand.

The spear on the arm was not pulled out,

Saimat was empty-handed for the moment;
He did not adjust himself well,
Exposed him entirely in front of his opponent.

Munar waved his hammer,
Pounded it on the top of Saimat's head mercilessly.
Not only Saimat himself,
But also his steed was smashed into pieces.

"Brave Kirgiz heroes,
Do not come and get killed one by one,
You can come with one thousand warriors together,
I will kill all of you,
Like killing sheep."
Munar swaggered before all others on the battlefield,
Shouted loudly in a very threatening manner.

A hero called Tatay,
Was far famed round the tribes,
He had experienced more than one hundred battles,
And was shining with exploits.

"Faced with Kangayi enemies,
It will be shamed,
If we are timid to go out to battle."
Tatay thought over again and again,
Lashed Tashkulan steed to many whip damage,
And dashed ahead to enemy with loud shouting.

Tatay and Munar began the fight,
Kangayi and Arashi became enemies with each other.
Munar saw coming Tatay,
Whose ferocious eye light,
Was like poisonous scorpion and spider,
Emitting venoms.
The hammer pounded Saimat to death,
Was risen up high again.

An idea occurred to Tatay's mind at the crucial moment,
He pricked out his spear from the lower edge of his gown,
Before Munar took the action,
The spear was right,
Pricked into Munar's belly.

Mountain-like Munar,
Stabbed down the saddle by Tatay,
Before even one round fight,
Munar became the dust on the earth.

When Kangayi people saw this,
They were all in tumult;
A guy called Adlay,
Whipped his horse out of his camp.

The guy named Adlay,
Flared up in a fighting mood,
He rode a Jilbasker steed,
And wore iron black armour.

Iron-made gaiters were on his legs,
Iron stick was put in front of the saddle;
Big spade was along him,
Sharp battle ax was hanging on the saddle.

Sabre was in the sheath,
Sharp long spear was in his hand;
The shield was hanging on his shoulder,
Battle ax was on the back of his waist,
Chest-protector was shining ghastly.

Iron-made knee pads were on his knees,
Hard gaiters were on his shanks.
He had plenty of fight eaperience in enemies,
And left life and death out of consideration.

Arashi shouted loudly to encourage,
Tatay whipped his steed and charged first.
What a crucial battle,
No one could talk it clearly.

Adlay dashed ahead,
With great anger,
He wanted a swift and ruthless action,
To kill all Brute people①.

He did not put Tatay in his eyes at all,
Rushed forward with his ax rising high.
Tatay hated to show his white feather,
Waved his spear to fight with his enemy.

Tatay looked for the chance with his eyes open,
After six-round fight,
He pricked his spear to Adlay's neck.

Yurt-size Adlay,
Sidestepped the coldly glittering spear.
Raised his battle ax up again,
Aimed at brave Tatay,
And chopped his ax out brutally.

Courageous Tatay,
Spilt his brains on the earth.
The damned villain,
Took hero Tatay's life away.

In Arashi camp,
No one dare go out to fight.
Adlay gave out the shouting of victory,
With great joy.

① Brute people: It is the name Karamark gave to Kirgiz, it means Mountain Herdsmen.

Among Arashi people,
There was a warrior called Tatbek,
He was a reliable warrior,
For Kazakh Khan Yurb.
Tatbek was young and spirited,
Wood-like head was magical.

He owned powerful back and shoulders,
Beautiful heavy eyebrows and shining eyes.
He could shoot with great precision,
And was courageous and skillful in battle.

Of no ordinary talent,
Brave and stalwart,
He was a gritty daring general.
No one could compare with him when waves ax,
He was a great versatile general.

Yurb Khan turned round and took a glance,
Of Tatbek with heavy sight.
Tatbek grasped Khan's intention,
Whipped his horse forward like whirlwind.

He armed to the teeth with full confidence,
And charged forward courageously.
He whipped his steed ceaselessly,
The distance from his enemy was shortened immediately.

Adlay rushed ahead in the face,
His flat nose was like blade bone.
His running figure,
Was like bear chasing the marmot.

His dark purple steed,
Was like the crazy mule.
Under urgent situation,
It also could swallow the bones like the vulture;

When arrived at the side of the enemy,
It would bite the enemies.

Dirty and unkempt Adlay,
Did not take his own life into account.
He tied his waistband tightly,
Waved his spear hard with high spirit.
Tatbek fought with him,
Was like fighting with eagle in the sky.

Basin-size holes were dug out on the ground,
Dust rose high on battlefield.
Kangayi and Arashi people were watching on both sides,
They were nervous but excited.

Tatbek pricked his spear out,
Which just stabbed in Adlay's body.
Damned Adlay,
Turned round regardless of his running blood,
Waved his spade in the hand,
And scraped toward Tatbek in full strength,
Tatbek's head,
Was gone in the twinkling of an eye.

"How ferocious Adlay is!"
Kangayi people were all wild with joy and applauded.

Aydarhan's son Kokcher,
Dashed ahead to the battlefield without hesitation.
The blue and white steed under him,
Was sage Dirbish's magical steed originally.

In order to get this fine steed,
He exchanged with sixty nine good horses.
It was said that sixty nine horses he spent,
But actually more than five hundred and forty horses.

The steed cost him too much to buy it,
But it never made him disappointed:
It got the first place in competitions all the time,
It gave his master great joy,
Everyone could not help praising it when they saw it.

Hero Kokcher rushed to the battlefield,
Adlay waved his big spade,
And charged to him with full of his energy.
"I will die if he pounds on me with his spade first,
I must attack him for taking his life away first."
Hero Kokcher was looking for the opportunity to attack,
Like a hungry eagle wheeling in the sky.

He waved the long spear in his hand,
Pricked his spear to Adlay's arm directly,
Before Adlay took action.
Adlay's ulna and radius were broken,
And his arm broke into two.

The damned guy threw the halter in his hand,
And waved the battle ax with the other hand.
His dark purple steed,
Bit the snaffle tightly in its mouth with its head shaking.

The dark purple steed shook its head hard,
And threw the halter and the leather belt off,
But its forelegs were entangled by the halter,
Which made it fail to run forward anymore.

Hero Kokcher seized this opportunity,
Raised his ax high in his hand,
And pounded it to enemy's head severely.
Mountain-like Adlay,
Fell off from his steed right away.
Kokcher raise his sharp ax high again,
Aimed at Adlay's dead chunk-like neck,

And cut his enemy's head off.

The night came quietly in the bloody fight,
Both sides ceased all activities to rest.
Khans ordered more sentries to keep guard on camps,
Soldiers all fell into sleep.

Sentries spent whole sleepless night,
In avoiding enemies,
They opened their eyes widely and listened carefully,
Till the morning came.

Battle drum sounded again,
Battle fire burned again.
Both sides stood against for fighting,
Soldiers and horses assembled around the battlefield.

Three warriors had lost their lives,
Kokcher could not bear it anymore.
Aydarhan's son hero Kokcher,
Dashed ahead to the battlefield first;
His great heroic manner,
Was like waving tide in the sea.

A general rushed out from Kangayi camp,
He put on a fierce look.
He was one of the ten generals,
Others called him monster Otukoy.

When his brutish nature broke out,
Kangayi people experienced disaster,
He would eat a person per day.
Khans and generals let matters drift,
Which encouraged his evil behaviours.

He behaved as a spoiled boy,
He acted wilfully and no one dared to stop him.

His horse was called Tarpledak,
It galloped ahead with its four hooves busy.

Otukoy's head was as big as a pot,
His eyebrows,
Were as thick as two big black hounds.
He opened his mouth with a big yawn,
And his teeth met like mountains cracked together.
He dashed in the face of Kokcher,
Without hesitation.

Kokcher's blue and white steed,
Went ahead quickly like an arrow.
It rushed forward swiftly,
Like the coming flood.

Stout Otukoy,
Had six-span shoulder;
Anyone met him on the road,
Would fail to flee as the death was on the road.

The flesh on his face,
Was enough to feed six hounds full;
He opened his hole-like mouth,
And shouted "He……he……",
Spittle was full on his lips.
Yurt-size iron hammer was waved in the air,
And was severely pounded to Hero Kokcher.

The clever blue and white magical steed,
Dodged left and right with his master on its back.
Kokcher was not an ordinary person,
He held tightly the halter and dodged aside.
Otukoy's huge hammer,
Pounded on the ground.

The big hole pounded on the ground,

Was like a dark deep well.
Spring seeped out from the dry ground,
Made the earth miry in a minute.

Otukoy was a famous general,
He was with extraordinary physical strength,
He was really his master's reliable and capable assistant.
Fought with him,
Kokcher could be called a hero.

He acted agilely and violently,
Like an eagle wheeling in the sky.
Before Kokcher turned round,
Otukoy's hammer came for the second time.

Great hero Kokcher,
Was wild with rage,
In a twinkling of an eye,
He stabbed his spear more than thirty times.
Otukoy's armour was cut into pieces,
And flew away like snowflake.

Extremely cruel Otukoy,
Was embarrassed beyond words,
Vexed at not being able to put Kokcher into hell,
He raised his ax up high in his hand.

Kokcher attacked in advance,
The point of the spear was pricked into enemy's chest.
The fast blue and white steed,
Rushed to the back of the enemy.

Otukoy did not draw his attention back,
The long spear stabbed on him again.
A blast of blood,
Flew down Otukoy's bottom.

The Tarpledak steed under his bottom,
Acted and turned around slowly;
Hero Kokcher waved his long spear,
Stabbed on the right ribs of his rival.
He twisted his spear in the hand,
From the chest, bottom and the waist,
Blood was running down ceaselessly.

There were already three wound on him,
Blood had dyed all his body red.
Otukoy had no energy to go on fighting,
And did not attack Kokcher any more.
He had to turn his horse and give up fighting,
Regardless of his dignity.

He turned around,
And made his back faced with Kokcher.
Kokcher kicked his stirrups,
And his blue and white steed dashed ahead fast.

The door-size crescent battle ax,
Was waving in Kokcher's hand;
The ax cut one after another toward the enemy,
It waved like the whirlwind.
Otukoy's helmet was broken,
Pieces of the shield flew to everywhere.

Brave Kokcher was with his heart afire,
Called up all his courage,
Launched more fierce attack.

He raised his battle hammer high with both his hands,
And pounded severely to his enemy's head,
Continuously,
Made his enemies into hell.

One of the ten generals Ketlik,

Ground his teeth with rage,
Whipped his horse to the battlefield,
And launched the attack to Kokcher.

Killed two generals in succession,
Hero Kokcher was in high spirit of fighting.
Ketlik made a big show of his strength,
And intended to struggle for mastery with Kokcher.
He roared like thunder,
Made the fierce wind howled.

When common soldiers saw this,
They were all shivered from head to foot.
Every of them was frightened out of their wits,
And their faces were all in the colour of pale.

Ketlik had a murderous look on his face,
The dense long hair on his face,
Was enough to make a pair of felt socks.
The ferocious look from his eyes,
Showed the light of murdering,
Like a hungry cheetah.

His unkempt dense beard,
Was like the long mane of brown stallion.
His eye sockets were as deep as the holes,
His forehead was broad and high.
If he roared like thunder,
He could swallow hundred persons.

His gloomy expression was terrible,
As the stormy dusk came.
Long hair on his head was like weed,
His eyesight was as cold as the iron.

His legs were much longer than any others',

And with two big knees.
Seeing his scary figure,
Passers-by would stagger.

Ketlik dashed ahead with loud shouting,
And whipped his steed to attack Kokcher.
Kokcher turned over in his mind secretly,
And intended to use the usual tactic to fight his rival.
Ketlik came in his face,
Was rushing ahead with more horrible complot.

Ketlik waved his spear which had a baffle,
At the moment Kokcher made the turn,
He dashed ahead,
And pricked Kokcher down the horse.

Kokcher was in a dangerous situation,
Sirak bursted into a fury,
He shouted "Manas" loudly,
Kicked the horse belly with the stirrups severely.

The thunder-like shouting of Sirak,
Was breath-taking and earsplitting,
A lot of sleepy guys,
Opened their eyes suddenly.

Dust rose up behind Telkzler,
High in the sky.
Jagurp Khan's son Sirak,
Wore a black felt cap,
He whipped his horse and held his spear tightly,
And never felt nervous and scared on the battlefield.

He had a shrewd tongue,
An unceasing flow of words came out once he spoke.
The young lion was regardless of his own danger,
Great mountain in front would collapse.

Sirak was like a hungry tiger jumping on the prey,
No one could stop him.
His all-conquering power,
Made his enemies struck dumb.

Sirak's spear was as fast as himself,
But his enemy was a clever guy,
Did not fall off the horse.
Viperous and foxy Ketlik,
Had no time to attend to Kokcher,
And had to turn round to fight Sirak.

"I will avenge my dead soldiers,
I want Kokcher's blood to flow over the earth.
Who are you, dare to ward my spear off?
You shout the name of 'Manas',
You must be a Kirgiz,
I have known this.

"You are a child like a red apple,
You are not dry behind the ears.
I persuade you not show off in front of me,
Otherwise I will send you to meet with your ancestors.

"If I fight with you,
Just like crumbing a corn,
Others must say I fight a child,
They will laugh at me pitilessly.

"I do not want others to laugh at me,
And bear a bad name of bullying a child.
It seems that you are a brave boy,
You dare to come and fight with me?

"You'd better go back home secretly,
I do want to see your mother cry for you.
In order to let all be sincerely convinced,

You can make several stabs before you leave,
I will not make a fuss with you."

Sirak bursted into hearty laughter after he heard that,
He waved the long spear in his hand:
"Ketlik, you should think how to save your own life,
Instead of considering for me!"

Ketlik stared his evil eyes big,
And licked his lips ceaselessly:
"I just need pinch slightly,
You will become the powder.
Who will come and avenge you,
Who will help you kill your enemy?"

Sirak continued the talk immediately:
"Although you have mountain-like figure,
Ketlik, how can you compare with me!
You talk nonsense here,
You just want to prolong your life for a while.

"You think I have no backup force,
Do you worry about me?
My father is Jagurp Bayi,
Lion Manas is my elder brother;
I have enough confidence and courage,
To capture Aranick town by myself."

"You said your elder brother is Manas,
Do you fear nothing with him at your back?
Do not think you have defeated,
Kontoy, Shawruk and Badikoler,
You can win all the time.
I will take your life,
In only one round!"

The boar waved his battle ax,

Charged forward with rage.
He changed to his spear suddenly,
And pricked Sirak severely.

Seeing the spear Ketlik stabbed,
Hero Sirak did not blink his eye.
Sirak warded off Ketlik's spear,
And the spear broke into several pieces and fell off.

Kangayi people stood outside the battlefield,
Were worried and shouted in fear.

Ketlik was boiling with rage,
And bit his lips tightly.
He turned shame into anger:
"Kill him,
Or die under his knife."
Ketlik stamped with rage,
He regarded Sirak in front of him,
As a tiny man as high as his trouser legs.

Sirak took all his heart of grace,
He was full of confidence and with no fear,
Failure and death,
Had been thrown to the winds by him.

Black mane wolf Sirak was brave,
And full of energy,
He whipped his Telkzler magical steed,
Charged to his enemy again.

Kangayi hero Ketlik,
Held his battle hammer in his hand:
He stared his eyes widely,
And was anxious to smash Sirak into pieces.

Sirak did not turn round and flee away,

And did not regard his rival into a mountain.
He whipped his steed and stabbed his spear,
As fast as the raindrops,
There were ten spear holes on his rival's back.

Ketlik's bottom slid out from the saddle,
And he lost his head,
Then his feet slid out from stirrups too.
He was frightened without any idea,
And turned round to watch Sirak's action.

"It is the right time to attack."
Sirak bursted a loud shouting,
Pricked the enemy's throat.
Ketlik could not hold out anymore,
And fell off from the horse back.
His mountain-like figure,
Collapsed and his life was gone.

Sirak whipped his steed,
Chopped off Ketlik's head and went back to the camp.
"Black mane wolf, this is the gift for you!"
He presented enemy's head to Manas.

Manas Khan was fairly excited:
"Since you are so polite,
I will present my writing desk,
To you, my dear brother."

Right at the moment,
Warrior Adick came fast on his steed.

He was also a general from Kangayi,
He was brave and shining with exploits,
And was all-conquering in many battles,
Many warriors died in his hand.
No heroes fought with him,

Had saved their lives under his weapon.

Fierce Adick rushed into the battlefield,
How could we talk clearly about this devil?
When he was too thirsty,
He would go to look for the snow on desert,
And drank human blood as tea.

The skinny old people and tender kids,
Would be swallowed by him as food,
Without any scruple.

Many Khans, countless common people,
The vast and mighty troops,
Were all at his beck and call.
As long as hearing his name,
People were all scared to flee.
The horrible name Adick,
Was as charnel as the ghost.

Rode a wild rhinoceros,
Furious Adick dashed to the battlefield.
With an iron spade in his hand,
No matter who came to fight with him,
They all lost their lives under his spade.

Adick was extremely violent and wicked,
He stood in the center of the battlefield.
He showed his teeth for his power,
And did not stop talking.
He was like a mad dog,
Went and bit the rider on the horse.

His face became blue suddenly,
And showed his ferocity.
Aimed at hero Sirak,
He stabbed his spear out.

The point of spear missed the rival's obstruction,
And pricked on hero's thigh.
The point of spear pierced through muscle,
And stabbed on the bone.

He pulled the spear back at full tilt,
A gust of blood as thick as the halter,
Ran out as a river,
The bottom of Telkzler steed,
Was dyed red by hero's blood.

Adick had his head turned,
By the success,
Before he turned his rhinoceros round,
A new round attack was going in the battlefield.

Berita's son hero Chuwak,
Was in a great figure with broad shoulders,
He whipped his Koktiker steed,
No one could stop him.

He was such a great hero,
He could sweep all the enemies away with his spear.
His shouting was as loud as the thunder,
How could others compare with him!

Koktiker steed under his bottom,
Had a thick tail coiled up,
Its shining eyes,
Was like the flame bumped by the bellows.

Koktiker steed,
Was beaming in spirits;
Its back was like a curving scaffold,
Its thighs were as flexible as the argali;
Its belly retrenched and chest rose up high,
Its ears stretched out and mane could be seen clearly.

It could jump over thousand feet wide valley,
Without its hooves touching the ground;
It could stride over ten thousand feet high obstacle,
With its hooves flying in the air;
It could run ahead as fast as a bird,
When it met rivers across in the front.

It was like a flying bird,
And was like an arrow on the bow.
Adick just turned round,
Black mane wolf Chuwak had come in front of him.

He stabbed out the spear aimed at the rival's waist,
Adick raise his spear to defend the spear broke into two,
The broken pieces of his spear flew everywhere,
And the harsh sound was scaring.

A half span long broken piece,
Flew to Adick,
And pricked into his right eye socket.
His eyeball came out immediately,
Like the running brains.
Adick could not bear the pain,
And turned his rhinoceros right away.

At the moment he turned round,
Hero Chuwak whipped his steed ahead,
He waved his spear,
Pricked Adick more than ten times in succession.

Adick was shivering with great pain,
Blood flew out from his nose and mouth;
Chuwak did not rest for a minute,
And attacked Adick ceaselessly.
He caught up from the side,

Chopped off one arm,
Of Adick on the ground.

He could not see clearly with one eye lost,
And fail to balance with one arm left;
His spade was fell on the ground,
Stretched neck was like a drowned rat.

Chuwak whipped his steed ahead,
With his chest rising up,
He raised his coldly glittered ax high,
And chopped on the head of Adick.
Adick's skull was broken,
And blood bursted forth far.

Kangayi people could not bear any more,
Many warriors rushed to the front,
Picked up their firelocks,
And shot the hated bullets toward Chuwak.

More than one thousand Kangayi people,
Came up in a circle.
There was a warrior called Batak,
His mount was a fierce elephant.

Wore a yurt-size felt,
Hero Showtu was not ordinary.
How could he let Kangayi people behave widely,
White steel made firelock was on his shoulders.
Since Kangayi people used firelocks,
How could he bear it.
He aimed with his firelock,
And fired Batak's elephant down on the ground.

Before Batak stood up,
Hero Chuwak whipped his steed ahead.
Batak did not pull his arm back,

His arm had been chopped off by Chuwak.
Batak shook his body miserably,
But soldiers thought he was giving them order,
So they rushed ahead like flood.

Before the main troop arrived,
Hero Showtu aimed at the enemies,
Shot to death,
The first coming sixty soldiers.
No one could save his life,
Once shot by Akbaran firelock.

Showtu drew his firelock back,
Jumped on the back of his steed,
And charged with the shouting of "Manas!".

Kangayi camp was in tumult,
All went out to battle with no one left.

"Kirgiz commit a crime,
All soldiers in the front were shot to death.
We will besiege like the iron wall,
Never let one Kirgiz flee away."
Khans gave out such order.
Noisy Kangayi people,
Whipped their horses and all set out.

The head of forty warriors Kerlgelchal,
Was bad tempered,
He whipped his Akborchek horse,
Charged first regardless of his life.

Kangayi people spread over the earth,
There were Karaketay and Karamark people,
And some others tribes,
They were all their dependency.

They whipped their horses ahead together,
There was fierce enemy Banus,
Two generals Sokso and Sotoy,
And Duohan in them.

Karaboruk was Duohan's daughter,
She was also famous,
Among ten great generals.

Besides Shakur and Koran,
There was female general Karaboruk.
Two Khans, two generals,
And three warriors forced their way ahead.
Like the burning fire,
They acted recklessly and no one could stop them.

Ceaseless clops shook the earth,
The sounds from firelocks roared,
Bullets flew like raindrops.
The gunshots sounded everywhere,
Gun-barrels were as red as the fire.

Battle drums could be heard without end,
Horses galloped and dust flew.
Broad trouser-legs waved in the air,
Crescent battle ax shone at the waist;
Sword sounded in the sheath,
The long spear was noisy in the hand.

Heroes stood straight as mountains,
Breast protectors were hanging at the forebreast,
Shields were on the shoulders,
Helmets were on the heads,
They were as powerful as the peaks.

Stared the hostile eyes,
Yurt-size spade was in the front,

Eyes were red with full of hatred.
Kangayi troops turned out in full strength,
As the fierce wind swept the leaves.

Heroine Kirgiz people,
Met the attack calmly and orderly.
Bakay Khan held the battle banner high,
And stood in the front alone.
The rest Arashi people,
Stood ready in battle array like the cold cliff.
They chopped everyone they met,
No one had the chance to be alive.

All heroes entered the battle,
And killed enemies more than half.
Long spears pricked countless heroes off the horses,
Swords chopped countless heads off,
Crescent ax split enemies into halves.
They acted with great dignity,
Defence was impossible.

Encountered such heroes,
Kangayi people fled away quickly,
With great fear.

Ayikoler Manas led the troops,
Kirgiz heroes followed him tightly.
Powerful Chuwak and Sirak,
Swept away all obstacles.
Forty warriors led by Kerlgelchal,
Killed enemies along the way.

Aydarhan's son Kokcher,
Charged at the head of his men,
Everyone praised him;
Kokcher was even braver after each fight,
He made enemies terrified at his news.

Heroes of indomitable spirit,
Could devote their lives for the honour.
Young lion Sirak,
Never put life and death in his heart.
He was sharp in movements,
Telkzler magical steed shuttled back and forth,
Countless enemies were mowed down on both sides.

Telkzler magical steed released its hooves,
Galloped as fierce wind.
Even the Jaglemay eagle in the sky,
Could not catch up with it.
In the face of Chuwak and his power,
Soldiers of Ketay and Karamark,
Dare not approach an inch.

Without watching in front and behind,
Without thinking over the life and death,
Hero Chuwak took his heart of grace,
Charged into enemies.

With the spear waving in his hand,
Lines of enemies,
Fell around him endlessly,
With loud crying.

"This guy will kill us all."
Kangayi people were confounded at this,
No one could understand what they were saying.
Their tongues were stiff,
Their voice was shaking,
No one could hear their buzz clearly.
Even two persons dare not go shoulder to shoulder,
All of them parted and fled away.

Hero Chuwak went ahead continually,
Killed enemy generals down the slope,

He killed two people with one stab.
With great rage,
They let corpses of horses piled like a mountain,
With angry eyes staring big,
They made enemies corpses piled like a mountain.

One hundred enemies were expelled by him,
One thousand enemies were killed by him,
When the number went to one thousand,
One corpse was set up as a label.
Brave black mane wolf Chuwak,
Regardless the hunger, thirst and tiredness,
Whipped his steed and fought with enemies.

All soldiers met in the face,
With Duohan and Banus Khan,
Failed to save their lives.
Sabres of these two warriors,
Were dyed red by enemies' blood totally;
None of the enemies fought with them,
Escaped from their sabres.

The two wild boars became crazy,
They killed people randomly no matter the enemy or fellow.
Sokso, Sotoy and Karldayar,
Tried to drive their own soldiers away,
And began the fight with Kirgiz,
The earthshaking battle between them started.

Two sides with full of hate met,
Countless lives were lost in the fight.
The arrogant warriors,
And heroes achieved success and fame,
Had no chance to fight with each other,
Were all wild with rage.

Like the quarries fell into the traps,

Many wise and agile persons,
Many radiant handsome boys,
And the depressed warriors,
No matter who he was, once the death came,
None could escape from the destiny of death.

There were the blind, the harelip,
The thin and tall, the fat and short,
The old and weak, the young and strong,
The agile, the unresponsive,
If the death came,
No matter who he was, he had no choice but accept.

Like forage grass having been cut down,
Enemies fell off on the ground with their heads rolled away.

Let us have a look at lion Manas,
He was like the burning fire;
With the sword waving in his hand,
He shouted loudly and charged all the way ahead.

The magical sword Bolicbye forged,
Was sharp enough to destroy everything,
The firelight gleamed at its point.

It could lengthen and shorten in the fight,
It could be forty spans long,
When it was drew out from the sheath;
When it was placed into the sheath,
It was only seven spans long.

There were flames in the eyes of lion Manas,
Just like the fire blew by bellows;
The white air came out from his mouth,
Was like the dense smoke rising from the chimneys.
He drove the fleeing enemies as the sheep,
And chopped them as if he was chopping the grass.

Kangayi people were utterly routed,
They shouted and fled for saving their lives only.
The lion did not let off a single enemy easily,
He whipped magical Arckura steed,
And led his troop to fight the enemies mercilessly.

Soldiers held spades in their hands,
Generals held shields on their shoulders,
No matter the old or the young, the rich or the poor,
Each of them was killed by the hero.
Manas waved his silver crescent ax,
Chopped like entering an unpeopled land.

The battle was going intensely,
Soldiers and horses boiled in the battlefield.
Shakur, Koran and Karaboruk,
These three appeared suddenly one after one.
They met in the face with black mane wolf Manas,
In the intense battlefield.

As soon as seeing their figures,
Black mane wolf Manas,
Had recognized their identity.
"If I fight them with my sword,
As what normal soldiers do,
Even if I defeat them,
It will smear my reputation."

He drew his sword back to the sheath,
And held his magical sear spear,
Whipped his steed ahead,
And met in the face with Shakur.

Young Manas was like a male camel,
He got in the way of his enemy.
Shakur dashed coming,

With a hundred Batman① heavy hammer in his hand.

Faced the lion, Shakur said to himself:
"As long as I defeat Manas,
I will make all Arashi surrendered."
He waved his battle hammer and charged to Manas.

Koran and Karaboruk,
Held their halters immediately.
They tried in vain to charge one by one,
And to capture Manas alive finally:
"It will be shamed to fight together,
The world will laugh at us,
We do not know who will get the honour?

"Manas is only a boy,
Shakur can defeat him alone.
Pound by a hundred kilograms heavy hammer,
Not only Kirgiz Manas,
But also the mountain could not bear it."

They were arrogant and highly conceited,
And waited for Shakur's success quietly.
Hero Shakur was odd in his characteristics,
He did some strange things.

He stared at Manas,
But his hammer was not pounded on Manas' chest;
He raised his hammer high,
And pounded it toward the cliff aside.
The cliff collapsed down to the ground instantly,
Arrogant Shakur felt triumphant,
Then he raised his hammer toward Manas.

Although he smashed the cliff into powder,

① Batman: Kirgiz language, It is the unit of weight.

Hero Manas did not even keep it in his mind;
Aimed at coming Shakur,
Manas stabbed him with the spear severely.

Shakur just took his spade,
And was ready to make a good fight.
Manas was quickly in movement,
He stabbed the spade with his spear.
All-conquering Sear spear,
Was thrusted through enemy's spade.

The spade was lifted up by the spear,
When Manas pulled his spear back,
The spade was still on the point of his spear.
He waved his long spear,
As fast as the whirlwind.
The spear and the spade fell off together,
Mountain-like Shakur was swept down the ground.

Shakur embraced the earth,
His head was buried in the earth.
Shakur could not bear the hero's gentle strike,
He breathed his last and died.

Seeing Shakur's miserable end,
Koran waved his spear and dashed ahead to the battlefield.
The weapon in his hand,
Please let me introduce it to you.

There were seven millstones,
The handle was made of hard wood,
Wrapped and fastened by the iron sheet outside,
It would never slip off from the hand easily.

When the battle began every time,
Damned Koran's eyes flashed,
He waved his weapon and charged to the battlefield,

And always defeated his rivals.
As long as he fought in the battlefield,
People watched outside the battlefield,
Were all thrown into panic.

He was widely known,
His date red steed was also outstanding.
Warriors fought with him,
Never escaped from death.

He let the blood dye the battlefield red,
And never returned without accomplishing,
He held seven millstones in his hand tightly,
None escaped successfully from his hand,
When fought in the battlefield.

The earth shook under his heavy steps,
He behaved fiercely and arrogantly.
He was a devil with malicious-looking,
He even did not keep the whole world in his mind.

He dashed ahead with showing his teeth,
And lifted his millstones and pounded toward the hero.
Before the millstones fell on the hero,
Lion Manas had raised his ax up,
And chopped toward the arm of his enemy.

The pain rose from his arm to his head,
His arm was chopped into half.

Hero Manas fought continuously,
He drew out his Achalbaris sword,
And chopped toward Koran hard.
Mountain-like Karamark hero,
Was shaking on the saddle in spite of himself.

His bottom was forced to leave the saddle,

His feet left the stirrups too.
He fell on the ground with a huge noise,
Like a big tree was chopped down.

The son of Kirgiz Black mane wolf Manas,
Would be an eternal hero.
He lifted his sword and killed his enemy,
The blood was all over the edge of the sword.

Killed two enemy generals,
Lion Manas was excited with fight,
He was more courageous in fighting.

Seeing the power and braveness of Manas,
Duohan sighed from the bottom of his heart:
"My beloved daughter Karaboruk,
It is a miracle that you are still alive now.

"You can not be against Kirgiz,
They drink blood as drink water.
This is their tradition,
To chop heads like cut watermelons,
They are cruel like this actually.

"I have given the order that let the elephants trample them."
Karaboruk accepted her father's suggestion,
And watched outside the battlefield.

Duohan's daughter Karaboruk,
Had sworn many times:
"I will marry anyone who defeats me,
But if he is defeated off the saddle by me,
I will urinate on his face."

Faced lion-like hero Manas,
Her mind was filled with thoughts and ideas:
"He is a real hero,

How can I return if I do not fight with him?
If he defeats me,
I will prepare to marry him.

"I accept my father's advice,
Watch aside for a while.
If he can dodge the strike of elephants,
I will fight with him.
If he could defeat me,
I will make the bed and cook for him."

A thousand thoughts came to Karaboruk,
She accepted her father's advice,
And stood aside quietly,
And watched the battle.

The thirty two elephants,
Were fed by Kangayi for a long time.

They were well trained like brave heroes,
On the nose of each elephant,
There was a well designed sharp spear tied together with it.

One elephant could kill thousands of people,
Even the troops owned more than ten thousand soldiers,
It is still hard to resist the strike from elephants,
The troops were utterly routed in a moment.

The elephants with spears on their noses were rushed,
And those without spears,
Waved their long nose,
Pulled the soldiers off their saddles,
And stamped them to death on the ground severely.
The mountain roared to the sky,
Could also be stamped down to the plain.

The trainers unlashed the elephants,

The elephants dashed ahead like the flood.
The warriors came to fight,
Were all knocked off by the elephants.

There was an elephant called Nuom,
It was the strongest and fiercest one,
Among the thirty two elephants.
Its back was sturdy,
It rushed ahead with firm steps.

Its tail was less than one span in length.
The spear on its nose was ten spans long,
And the spear was shining in the sunshine.
Its nose was like a knife grinder,
Muscle on it was shaking all the time.

Nuom rushed in the front,
And arrived at their faces fast.
Please take a look at lion Manas,
He drew out coldly glittering sword,
Chopped toward Nuom in the front,
Cut its neck off cruelly,
The elephant fell off on the ground.

After killing the elephant,
Manas raised his head proudly.
Kangayi people shouted in terror:
"Do not say human,
Even elephants die in his hand."

Another two mountain-like elephants,
Staggered and arrived soon afterwards.
Powerful black mane wolf Manas,
Showed his lion-like expression.

The crescent ax chopped an elephant,
And made it go to hell in a second,

Another coming elephant,
Was pricked on its chest by the spear.

Sear spear pricked in from this side,
Pierced through the huge body of the elephant,
And came out from the other side,
Its head lowered and it fell and died.

Seeing three elephants died in succession,
The rest elephants became rattled and tried to flee.
They moved their huge limbs,
Turned round and fled to the back.

Their bodies stretched like the ropes,
The hooves moved confusedly.
Among crowded Kangayi people,
Too many were trampled underfoot.

Trainers came immediately,
They lashed the noses of elephants,
And tried to prevent elephants from escaping.
The elephants did not listen to the trainers orders,
But ran into the fences to hide.

Black mane wolf chased after the elephants,
Rushed into the crowded enemy camp.

Sokso Khan from the enemy camp,
Wore the armour.
The damned strong guy,
Whipped their horses and charged ahead.

Sokso was an arrogant guy,
He was a Khan and a general too.
He was supercilious,
He regarded himself as the only great general in the world.

He rode on buff Jeljetbes①,
Although he was by himself,
He had the power of seventy heroes.
He once defeated more than a hundred heroes,
Those heroes either died or were hurt,
There were giants and great heroes,
None of them dared to go against him with sabres.

He occupied the vast land,
And administered numerous people,
On the vast prairie in Kangayi,
Sokso was a well known hero.

He wore layers of armours,
And layers of shields were on his shoulders,
Iron waist band was on his waist,
He showed ferocious looking on his face.
Spear, sabre, iron hammer,
Spade and long iron stick,
Were all carried along with him.

The halter was raised high,
Firelock was hidden in his clothes,
Whipped his horse hard,
The dust was risen about all over the sky,
Made the sky dark.

The long beard was unkempt and waved in the air,
Just like the sheep was held the neck,
White foam came out from his mouth.

Stepped high and looked proud,
Like a male camel got mad,
And raised its head and howled.
He always carried a murderous looking,

① Jeljetbes: Name of the horse, it indicates the steed that can run very fast, it is called chasing-wind steed.

He was a hero had no contact with anyone,
He was harsh and cruel.

Tears ran along his cheeks,
The gum was full in his eye socket.
Mountain-like Sokso,
Came straight to fight with the hero.

He did not stop for a second,
Did not ask his rival's name either,
Just whipped his steed ahead hard,
Raised his spear and pricked toward the hero.

Hero Manas dodged and warded off the spear,
Waved his hammer ax to resist.
Crescent ax was more than ten thousand kilograms heavy,
The spear was knocked away into sky,
And then fell into Kangayi camp,
More than ten generals were crushed to death.

Sokso got wild with rage, his face turned deathly pale,
He waved his yurt-size iron hammer.
The hammer was forged by the dissolved iron,
Mixed with hard steel.

If the hammer pounded toward the hillock,
The huge rock would collapse.
With ferocious looking,
And unkempt appearance,
The lunatic guy,
Raised his hammer and pounded toward hero Manas.

Hero Manas went forward in his face,
And grasped his arm tightly,
Let his arm fail to bend and the hammer hang in the air.

Lion Manas showed his great courage,

Warded the enemy's hammer off easily,
And threw the enemy aside too:
"You are nothing more than this."
Lion Manas stopped his steed there.

Sotoy watched aside felt panicky,
He talked to himself incoherently,
He sent out forty warriors:
"Damned Manas,
He intends to kill all his rivals.

"Sokso fought with him,
It was a breath-taking fight.
You should go right now,
And think out a good plan to fight him.

"You are all heroes with high military skills,
You have experienced countless battles.
You go and cast a net to Manas,
It is your luck if you can mantle him in your net,
Then drag him back immediately."
Sotoy kept forty warriors in his camp,
They were ready to catch Manas with the net at any time.

Sokso flared up into a fury in the battlefield,
He felt shamed to be defeated.
His hammer was taken away by Manas,
He was angry with it,
And it made him feel miserable:

"I am giant Sokso,
I am always all-conquering,
I am well known around the world.
But my mountain-high fame,
Is destroyed in the turn of a hand.
How can I have the face to see others,
In my tribe people and relatives?"

He waved a long black steel spear,
The point of the spear was curving as tongues of wolves.
When he waved the spear in his hand,
It sounded like the fierce wind howled,
Which was extremely powerful and scary.

Sokso yelled in exasperation,
The hair on his face stood straight,
Which was enough to make three pairs of felt socks.
He waved his spear and charged ahead,
Hero Manas watched carefully with his eyes open wide,
And caught hold of the coming spear tightly.

The point of the spear was in Manas' hand,
Sokso held the body of the spear tightly.
Forty warriors sent out by Sotoy,
Arrived at their sides,
While they were pulling and dragging.

Forty warriors threw out the lassoes,
Toward Ayikoler Manas from all directions.
Forty thick ropes wrapped on Manas,
Which formed a big net,
Hero Manas,
Was trapped in the center of the net.

Forty warriors threw out the lassoes,
Shouted loudly,
They whipped their horses together,
And intended to drag Manas back to their camp.

No matter how hard they tried,
Manas sat still on his steed without any movement.
"I will drag him back by myself!"
Sokso said to himself with pride.

Seeing the ugly expression on Sokso's face,

Bright and brave Manas,
Got wild with rage immediately.
He held his breath and tightened his muscle,
Relaxed his limbs and took all his energy,
The forty thick ropes,
Were broken into tiny pieces,
Like a rotten felt.

Eagle Manas was swollen with anger,
He drew out his Achalbaris sword.
Seeing Sokso's posture of pulling the net,
Manas could not control his rage.
His hand raised and the sword fell,
Mountain-like Sokso was chopped into half at once.
None of forty warriors escaped,
And all were killed by Manas.

Sotoy, Banus and Duohan could not bear,
But they could not find good chance to fight either,
No one dared to go out to battle.
They three had to charge ahead together,
To fight with Manas.

They went from three directions,
And besieged Manas and fought with him;
They three charged one by one,
Each of them waved his battle ax.
They had a same goal,
To Kill Manas at once,
And let his blood burst forth from his chest.

Hero Sirak whipped his magical steed,
Held the spear with a blade in his hand,
And dashed ahead into the battlefield.
He saw Banus, Duohan and Sotoy,
Encircling the lion in the center,
Hero Manas, himself alone,

Was fighting with three strong enemies.

Agile Sirak held his long spear,
Pricked the long spear toward Duohan first.
Duohan fell off his horse Kachybas for more than three meters far,
And rolled on the ground.

Sirak went on charging forward,
And waved his spear to Banus.
Banus lost presence of mind,
He dared not to fight with the hero,
So he turned his horse and escaped in a hurry.

Duohan climbed on the back of his horse again,
But he had no desire to continue fighting,
He grasped the shaking saddle tightly,
And fled away in a flurry.

Sotoy had nearly been scared to death,
He was trying to flee in panic,
As soon as he turned round,
He met with Manas in the face.
Manas raised his sword,
And cut him into half from the top of his head.

Bloodthirster Banus whipped his horse to flee,
Sirak chased after him hard.
Karaboruk appeared suddenly,
And went to the side of Sirak.

Karaboruk was a heroine,
Even she was only a teenage girl,
She could be side by side with any man.
On the bloody battlefield,
Met with hero Sirak.
A fierce battle began between them,
They rushed and fought severely,

Which was very breathtaking.

A heroine and a hero,
Began a severe battle.
The two fine steeds Tilkzler and Galmanboz,
Were also like mountains meeting together.

Two heroes fought with each other,
They did not follow the usual fighting rules,
Heroine Karaboruk fought as hard as she could,
And had no intension to retreat.

They two chipped on each other's shoulder,
Kerlgelchal, Showtu and Tazbaymat,
Whipped their steeds to the battlefield:
Four heroes fought one heroine,
Karaboruk could not resist overwhelming number,
She had to turn her horse and back to the camp.

In the life-or-death battlefield,
Stirring and miserable things could be seen anytime.
"Where are you now?
Please come and help me.
I can not see you anywhere,
I am surrounded by my enemies."

Too many people got their heads hurt,
Their heads were swelling like the metal pails;
So many were chopped their arms off,
So many were disabled for life long;
So few old men died naturally,
But so many young people died in youth.

Too many were broken their legs,
And became the lame forever;
Too many people shouted their families' names,
In heart-breaking voice.

"My eye was pricked by a long spear,
How will I live a life as a blind person?"
Crying people were everywhere;
"Who saw my kids?"
Countless people asked about it from each other.

People got mad in the battlefield were in a mess,
They ran everywhere with panic.
People who lost both their ears,
Were running and fleeing anywhere.
Beards were pulled out by others,
There were many people with no hair on the face;
Scars were all over their faces,
Bleeding soldiers were all over the battlefield.

"My scar is too painful to bear!"
There were more complaining people;
People with their guts running out and bleeding,
Shrank into themselves.

There were also many people,
Broke their waists;
There were even more people,
Died with their eyes open;
Many people had lost their mind,
Began to talk rubbish.

"Where are you?"
The voice of looking for each other was everywhere;
There were also many happy people,
Without any wound on them;
Whispered to each other and discussed,
How to divide the spoils,
Was another scene of the battlefield.

"My kid, please come back soon!"
People looked for their kids were not in less number;

Soldiers blew their own horns with pride,
Could be seen anywhere.

It was really that hundred people had hundred names,
Hundred faces had hundred appearances,
Happiness and disaster could be seen everywhere.

Black mane wolf Manas,
Went in hot pursuit after Banus;
Arckura mounted the clouds,
"I must catch up with the enemy,
I will be shamed if I can not make it."

Manas chased ahead intently,
Banus fled hastily,
And turned his head to watch behind.
Manas and his steed,
Chased after him tightly on the vast plain.
Right at this moment,
A river valley came and blocked in the front.

Malicious Banus,
Turned his horse right away,
Along the valley,
And hid in the shadow of the valley,
To wait for the chance to secretly plot Manas.

Kankur hero Manas,
Chased after the enemy intently,
And intended to chop the enemy.
Hero Chuwak came over at this moment,
But he did not notice it.

Banus hid in the valley,
And waited for revenging,
When Manas went by with his steed,
The spear pricked toward ribs of Manas directly.

Hero Manas fell off from the steed,
Left the saddle on Arckura.

The horse of Banus,
Was stubborn and intractable,
It bit the snaffle tightly and jumped,
Before Banus held the halter and stopped it,
Hero Chuwak had arrived in front of him.

Chuwak did not come quietly,
He shouted loudly the name "Manas!",
The sound was reverberated in the valley,
And roared to the sky.

The shouting from Chuwak,
Beat the eardrum of Banus,
Banus lost presence of his mind,
And fled fast toward Badak mountain.

People lived in Badak mountain,
Were all Tart people,
Their leader Banus,
Was a highly skilled person hard to find in the world.
He acted evilly in collusion with Kangayi people,
And lived in Aranick town all the time.

"Why should I stay in Aranick?
I have my own town at Badak mountain,
I will return back to Tart people."
Banus did not turn his head,
Toward his hometown at Badak mountain,
Whipped his steed hard ahead.

Manas had got up from the ground,
And got on the saddle of Arckura,
Turned his horse round and was ready to return.

Karaboruk came for hiding from Sirak,
But she met with Manas at that moment.

Chuwak had found her,
He whipped his horse to her face.
After three rounds fight,
Brave Karaboruk became more courageous,
She knocked Chuwak down,
From the back of Koktiker steed.

Karaboruk stabbed Chuwak down,
The long spear glittered coldly,
And went to black mane wolf Manas' chest.
Lion Manas acted with complete confidence,
Warded the coming spear off.

He grasped her clothes,
And lifted her up from her horse,
And intended to put her under his stirrups.
The lion set his mind on capturing her horse,
And capturing her to his camp too.

Karaboruk was fearless in the face of this,
She stretched out her hands immediately,
And grasped the edge of Manas' white battle gown.
They two dragged with each other,
Galloped on the mountain and plain.

With shoulder to shoulder and hair to hair,
They went forward together.
They fought on the back of the horse,
Without winning the other.
They pulled and pushed on the back of the horse,
Without their feet leaving the stirrups.

While they were fighting hard with each other,
Kerlgelchal led forty warriors,

Arrived at their sides.

Warriors criticized from head to feet,
As noisy as the chirping birds.
Eriman's son Erchywuler,
Said like singing a song:

"Oh, my dear lion,
I must tell you what I have heard,
Karaboruk's desire she said by herself,
I will tell you too.

"Karaboruk is the daughter of Duohan,
Between Badak mountain and Barick,
On the vast prairie,
We herd the livestock and live happily.

"'Anyone who can defeat me,
I will marry him with all my heart.'
She has the request for his future husband,
This is her vow to herself.

"Karaboruk, what are you doing?
Does your wisdom disappear?
How do you dare to fight the lion,
Well known hero Manas?"

Hearing Erchywuler's words,
Karaboruk jumped off her horse,
Greeted the hero with making a bow with hands.
Karaboruk gazed with deep feeling at Manas,
But the black mane wolf did not pay any attention,
He turned his steed and went away.

In Aranick town,
Karaboruk was brought into submission of Manas.
Married Naklai from Karacha,

Married Karaboruk from Karamark,
The stories of these two wives of Manas,
Will be talked later.

Manas put down Aranick,
And went back to Samurhan to rest,
Day after day and year after year.

Let us put this aside,
And talk the story of,
Hero Manas invading Haohan.

Manas Marched against Haohan

Banus was scared out of his life,
He fled all the way helplessly,
Finally he arrived at Tashkent.
Keliff Khan in Tashkent,
Regarded him as the respected guest,
And treated him warmly.

After the rest of a few months,
Banus could not help saying:
"Keliff, please listen to me,
We can not live without doing anything,
The wealth in the world,
Can not come to you by themselves.

"Manas of Kirgiz,
Is well known and made the world surprised.
Kuokoydon and Sariarca,
And Aranick were all under his administration.

"We need think it over carefully,
He has stopped in Samurhan,
How could not he inquire about me?

"He will blame your bounties on me,
He will criticize your enthusiasm to me,
He will provoke incidents out of thin air,
To create disturbances for you.
Countless people have fought with him,
None of them escaped from his hand.

"He was like a venomous boa,
But now he becomes a giant dragon.
Can we find an opportunity,
To take a revenge one day?"

What Banus said,
Was exactly what Keliff wanted,
He was in high spirit immediately,
And spoke the truth to Banus:

"Banus, you talked sense.
I have had such plan for a long time,
But I found no chance to talk to you;
If I put forward that we go out for battle,
I am afraid you will be sad,
For you were just defeated by Manas,
And consider I expel you deliberately.

"We do not need to lead all our soldiers,
To charge ahead blindly.
There are Kirgiz in Namgan, Aushi,
We can go there to capture their horses first.

"Lose the horses they make the living,
They will report to Manas naturally.
When Manas lead his soldiers to come and fight,
We can try to annihilate them all.

"The hundredors in Andijan,
The thousandors in Magalan,
And famous Senchybek,
We need to mobilize them all.
Once Manas and his soldiers come,
We will ambush in Bozbeler valley,
And kill him at once.

"If he is scared to come,

Or Kirgiz does not report to Manas,
We will combine with Senchybek,
To charge ahead together,
To attack the home of Manas and his people.

"Before we set out with our troop,
We can not forget to report,
To Arokai and Duohan in advance."
They discussed their plan over,
And then sent servant to deliver message to Senchybek.

Keliff and Banus connived together,
And were in collusion with Senchybek,
To rob horses of Kirgiz,
Between Namgan and Aushi.

In a short period of time,
They robbed crazily for three times.
They did recklessly in the third time,
They robbed not only horses and other livestock,
But also girls and ladies.

Suffered the robbery and humiliation from enemies,
Kirgiz were all burning with rage.
They had no way to send out their messenger,
To deliver the bad news to Manas.
Enemies had blocked all the roads,
Kirgiz had no chance to pass sentries one after another.

Young men were all sent to be slaves,
They pulled the sleighs and carts.
Arashi people were injured in miserable sufferings,
The misery in their hearts had no where to be released.

They wanted but had no way to go into earth,
They wanted to die but life was precious.
Although they had the thought of dying,

The desire for living was alive in their hearts.

Kirgiz were trapped in disaster,
They lived a miserable life.
Kirgiz were all under severe moniter,
Time hung heavy on their hands.

Keliff, Banus and Senchybek,
Could always receive,
Secret orders from Arokai, Duohan and Muradiler;
Niskara Khan, Wusan Khan,
And giant Georoy,
Also arranged their secret messengers,
Came and went between them,
Without stopping;

Kangayi and Karamark people,
Tangut and Ketay people,
Were all under the administration of Arokai's son Kunwuer Bayi.
Aisanhan was their king,
He was on the throne stably.

Kantun city in the remote place,
Was Aisanhan's hometown.
It was as big as five Begin cities,
No one did not know him in that city.

Kunwuer Bayi sent the secret order everyday,
To Keliff and Banus,
And asked them to monitor Kirgiz severely.
Keliff, Banus and Senchybek,
Did not fear anything with Kunwuer's backing.

"We have our strong backing,
We can ride roughshod over Kirgiz recklessly,
Descend great disaster on them."
They behaved with unbearable insolence,

And forcibly occupied livestock and women recklessly.

An old man called Abultay,
Was over seventy and in bad health;
His body was as bent as a bow,
He sat beside the stove all day without going out,
And with slavering between sleep and wake.

He lied at home for more than half a year,
But never groaned and moaned because of the pain.
All other Karamark had concluded,
That he would die soon.

Everyone thought Abultay had died,
So no one went to see him.
But the old was not overwhelmed by the pain,
He drew himself up by strong will.

He went out of his yurt in secret,
And led his fast old bull.
Chawap① was filled full in the leather bag,
Solid food was tied on the waist.
On a dark night,
Old Abultay opened his door secretly,
And he was covered well by the night.

Over seventy Abultay,
Undertook the mission of Kirgiz.
Under the cover of the night,
Moved forward to Samurhan directly.

He hid by day and came out by night,
Finally he fulfilled his will.
He was an old man over seventy years old,
He and Manas' father Jagurp Bayi,

① Chawap: a kind of drink of Kirgiz, it is made of the mixture of water and yogurt.

Had been friends for many years.

Jagurp was taking a walk outside of his yurt,
He saw Abultay arriving at his door,
After a hard long journey.

Abultay walked forward,
And asked Jagurp unreservedly:
"Jagurp Bayi, do you know,
Why I come day and night,
Regardless of my health?

"Your son has been a great hero,
So you put the past suffering aside;
And only enjoy the comfortable life now,
Old friend has already not in your mind.

"But I ride a bull,
To come here with hardship on my way.
I ask you, your son Manas,
Why does he just stay here to waste the time?"

Jagurp Bayi came forward,
Held the halter of the bull:
"Oh, you damned Abultay,
Close your mouth and come in soon.

"You must come from afar,
And hungry and thirsty.
Please come and eat something first,
Then pour out your complaints."

Jagurp tied the bull to the pole well,
And led the old man Abultay,
To his house.
Manas was sitting in the yurt,
He had seen all that happened outside.

"It seems this is not a small issue!"
He questioned himself.
He stood up and walked slowly,
To the door of his father's yurt.

Qierdy was really happy on this,
She prepared the food for the guest,
And talked with Abultay about the family chaos:
"Abultay,
We have separated for many years from each other,
Your past looking is gone,
Are you in good health and how about your livestock?

"How is your wife?
Do you tie the mares and drink their milk,
And have enough lamb and horse neck to eat?
Do you have camels to carry the yurts when you move,
And build the bedroom with carving beam?

"Do you have sons and daughters,
Or you have neither son nor daughter,
You are lonely and live by yourself?
Do you bear the disaster in life,
And suffer in daily life?

"Do you have cows in winter,
Do you have enough milk in winter?"
Qierdy was an educated and reasonable lady,
She was passional to her guest.

Jagurp continued the talk:
"Qierdy, my wife,
Please stop your chatter,
Are you crazy?
Serve us the horse milk soon,
Abultay must be very thirsty.

"Do we have cooked meat,
Horse guts and horse neck fat,
Do we have butter mixed with sugar,
And solid yogurt and pancake.
No matter what kind of food we have at hand,
Let him eat first,
Then he can tell us what he wants to say.

"If he has a nice horse,
How could he ride a bull here?
If he eats meat and drink meat soup everyday,
How could he be so skinny?
If he has money full of his bags,
How could he wear such poor clothes?"

Qierdy turned her head,
And nodded to Bakdolet.
In a moment,
All kinds of delicious food were on the cloth.

Right at this moment,
Manas walked in the yurt.
He stretched out his hands,
To show his respect to the old.

Abultay greeted him back,
They three sat around the table cloth,
And began their warm discussion.

Jagurp was in deep thought,
Then he sent his servant to invite hero Bakay.
Bakay went out his yurt soon,
Then they four sat together.
In order to let the old eat quietly,
They were silent most of the time.

As soon as the table was cleaned,

Abultay had cried and could not stop:
"Lion Manas, my boy!
Though we have never met with each other,
I have known him for a long time.
We are under the humiliation of our enemies,
But I never lose my confidence.

"I can not bear enemies' humiliation,
So I rode my bull and left the village.
I set out from Namgan,
Came to report to you through untold hardships.
In order to avoid enemy's spy,
I must hide by day and come out by night.

"My lion, my boy,
I will tell you the reason of my coming.
Banus in Aranick,
Flee from your hand,
To find the shelter in Tashkent.
Keliff Khan in Tashkent,
Treated him warmly.

"Hundredors of Andijan,
Thousandors of Margalan,
Senchybek with long beard,
And Keliff and Banus,
They acted in collusion with each other,
To attack Kirgiz of Namgan and Aushi brutally:

They plundered lots of livestock,
Not only one time,
They plundered three times.

"They occupied our wives and daughters,
Lordly and imperiously.
The young and strong boys,
Were forced to be porters to pull the carts,

To work as slaves and coolies.

"People lost their freedom,
Roads are all closed and blocked.
Kirgiz live there,
Do not you think they are your fellowmen?

"I ride my old bull to here,
Just for telling you these things."
Abultay finished his words,
With tears and great sadness.

Qierdy stood up,
And wiped her eyes at the same time,
Then she said something to comfort:
"Abultay, you are so brave!
You did such a great thing.

"You put in hard work for your people,
In order to prevent fellowmen from enemies' humiliation,
You ride your old bull,
To here on earth through hardships.

"Bakbolet, please serve him in person.
Abultay, your hatred and complaints,
Hero Bakay and Manas,
Will listen to you carefully and keep it in their hearts."

Manas continued the talk,
His words were sincere:
"Uncle Abultay is old and weak,
He rode the old bull and endured the hardships,
He was tired from body to heart,
And suffered what he can not bear.

"Uncle comes here in person,
Shows us his mature wisdom.

He is such a strong elder,
He will never forget his families and fellows.

"He can come in person,
Endure the hardships in the journey.
We should send a servant,
To serve him day and night.

"Before we go back with him,
Please serve him with best food and drink.
There must be someone accompanying him everyday,
Get a person to play marble checker with him.

"If the uncle feels sad and lonely,
You two elders can talk with him,
Accompany him all the day."

He turned round and said to Abultay sincerely:
"Please stay here till we return in triumph,
We are sorry for neglecting your village,
I will be reassured if you forgive me!
Please tell us your son's name,
Then we can search and look for him for you!"

After hearing this,
Sadness came up to his heart again,
He cried even more sadly:
"If I have my own son,
How could I bear such resentment?
An old man over seventy years old,
How could I ride the bull to cross hills and waters!

"After Qierdy asked me whether I have children,
I feel sad full in my heart,
I am shaking with sorrow!

"There was a time, your father was young and strong,

Abultay in front of you,
Was also in the prime age.

"I have neither son nor daughter,
But a weak wife confines to bed,
My old wife and I rely upon each other for life,
My only worry is my people's sorrow.

"Every time I think about their suffering,
I am wild with sadness and rage!
Oh, my boy!
I have nothing to say except this.
Please bury me if I die,
I have no other desire but this."

Hero Manas was broad-minded,
He warned again and again,
To his two mothers and one father,
To make the old happy and comfortable.

Warriors were all ready in full battle array,
Saddles were on the horses already;
Weapons were equipped well,
Nothing was left and unprepared.
Food was abundant in supply,
The long troop followed after the hero.

To attack Haohan town first,
To defeat their enemies by a surprise move;
To capture Haohan town first,
Then launch all-out offensive to Tashkent.

"To capture Haohan first,
And block the way,
To Kashgar completely,
And cut off the enemy's route of retreat,
Then wave our battle banner toward Tashkent.

"If we charge to Tashkent first,
Five overlords settled in Kangayi,
Leader in Kashgar,
They will unite together,
To launch all-out attack to Kirgiz.
Innocent common people along their way,
Must be plundered by them,
With blood running like river."

Uncle Bakay, hero Manas,
And hero Chuwak,
Got together and discussed of expedition.
After the tight negotiation,
They saw eye to eye and began to act.

They set out from Samurhan,
Stepped on the journey to Namgan,
Like an angry lion,
They hunted their games along their way.

Warriors talked cheerfully and humorously,
They were not nervous at all,
When they felt lonely,
They gathered their horses together,
To laugh at each other's demerits,
To ask about each other's secrets.

Talked about their loving experience,
Looked for their friends at similar age.
If there was nothing to do,
They whipped their horses to compete with each other.

After several days journey,
Their troop had arrived,
At Haohan town north of Namgan.
Sentries in Haohan patrolled everywhere,
To observe Kirgiz carefully all the time.

Before the sentry were aware,
Before the sentry went back to report,
Bozwuler acted agile,
And had arrived near the sentry.

The sentry noticed the sound around him,
So he rushed and hid behind a cliff.
Agile Bozwuler could not be cheated so easily,
He was experienced on this kind of issues.

He blocked the sentry's route of retreat,
And captured the sentry alive quickly.
He held the horse of the sentry,
And escorted him back to the camp.

Hero Sirak inquested the sentry,
The sentry was wild with fear,
He made a clean breast of all the things he knew:

"Senchybek Khan in Haohan,
Was absolutely obedient to Keliff and Banus,
He sends sentries to patrol everyday,
To watch any movement of Kirgiz.
If there is anything or anyone suspicious,
We should report to him as soon as possible.

"When I saw the figure of your hero,
I considered him as the one to come to pay tax.
We are only arranged to patrol and watch,
We do not know any other thing.
They negotiate secretly every time,
Never allow us to ask about anything."

Sirak heard the confess of the sentry,
He made the order strictly:
"I can let you go back now,
Do not miss this and that,

Tell everything you have seen and heard here,
To Senchybek without any omission.

"You do not need to hide anything,
Just tell him hero Manas has come here.
If we attack suddenly and plunder at our will,
The common people will be in disaster.
Manas comes to battle this time,
Not only a small Haohan town,
But also Tashkent will be trampled down.

"Let him make the decision of his future,
Otherwise we will get our troop ready to battle.
You must tell all this clearly,
To Khan of Haohan."

Hero Sirak was very patient,
To ask about the sentry.
Showtu found Chuwak,
And talked to him ceaselessly:

"Sirak made the decision by all himself,
Inquisited the sentry proudly.
Manas and heroes like you,
Has been forgotten by him,
Do you know what is wrong?

"Bozwuler was agile in action,
And caught the sentry of Haohan,
Sirak made the decision of releasing him,
Without asking your opinion."

Right at this moment,
Hero Sirak walked into the yurt.
"Where is the sentry Bozwuler captured?"
Chuwak asked Sirak.

"He is a common soldier,
I did strict inquest on him.
He is only a nobody,
You heroes do not need to mind.

"I have told him all I want to say,
Then I let him go back to Haohan town.
You are nearly of the same age with my brother,
And nearly the same fame with him.
A small sentry is a nobody,
How could you do the inquest by yourself?"

"What Sirak said is reasonable!"
Heroes all laughed chipperly.
On what Sirak had done,
They all agreed.

The sentry was released by Sirak,
Went on his return journey with great fear.
Whipped his horse and rushed on the road,
Without sparing his horse,
There were not halter marks but blood stains on his horse.

Two horses were tired to death on his way,
He had to change his horse.
He did not leave the saddle and the horse never stopped,
He arrived at Senchybek's palace out of breath.

He staggered and could not stand still,
Like a young baby.
Senchybek got exasperated after seeing him:
"Such an idiot,
Put chains and torture-rack on him!
Then take the chains off,
Hang him up from his fingers for cruel torture."

Headsmen rushed forward,

The poor sentry suffered again.
Although he had endured great hardships on his journey,
Disaster descended on him again.
He was exhausted from shouting,
Told the things he had seen and heard disjointedly.

Senchybek opened his eyes wide,
Kept silent with thinking,
He began to notice the sentry's words.

He asked to stop the torture,
And asked about the information:
"What kind of hero Manas is?
How tall and how heavy he is?
How many warriors does he have,
Did you notice these things?"

Senchybek who was made use of Banus and Keliff,
Was haunted with fear,
He inquired about the information of Manas completely.

The sentry opened his mouth reluctantly:
"I did not see Manas,
He is steady and does not show his face readily,
Only a young man questioned me.

"That young man asked only a few words,
Did not ask for more of our news.
He only asked me to send words to you,
He said Manas will come.

"He also said you should consider carefully,
If you go your own way,
Death will descend on you soon.

"The person interrogated me is a warrior,
All the people I saw there,

Are valiant and exceptional.
Do not need to mension Manas,
All his warriors are like leopards in the mountain.
Each of them looks ferocious on the face,
Which makes anyone see them in panic."

The sentry faltered out a few words,
His spirit had left the body;
He was shaking and felt numb all over,
And fell on the ground without conscience;
He struggled to stand up,
But then fell and died soon.

Senchybek was so scared,
That he could not fall asleep the whole night,
He reclined in bed with thousands of thoughts,
All kinds of thoughts came in his mind.

Nightmares and sweet dreams,
Were all haunted in his mind;
He dreamed he won the battle,
And then lost the battle when he made a turn.
Struggled between winning and losing,
The morning finally came.

Let us put aside this section,
Talk about the story that hero Senchybek,
Lead his troop to surrender to Manas.

Senchybek Surrendered with His Tribe

Senchybek had six ministers,
Five advisers,
And some other counsellors to plan.

The sun just rose up,
Fifty people had gathered in Senchybek's yurt.
All their opinions were accordant,
So they lowered their hands to show their respect,
For going to welcome Manas.

Everyone had no dissent,
They made the final decision.
The gifts offered as a tribute to Manas were chosen,
They reported the gifts:

"Genuine gold of one coach,
Silver of two coaches,
Black tea of six coaches.
One hundred single-hump camels,
And one hundred steeds.
If these gifts can give us the peaceful and comfortable life,
We only need to appreciate that.

"It is us,
Who mess up their lives first.
Since we listened to bad man's instigation,
We have to be hoisted by our own petard now!
And we have to vow to them,
For never fighting them."

They were busy preparing,
The first batch of gifts had been ready to carry,
Senchybek's servant who made the tea for him,
Rushed into the yurt in a hurry,
And spoke ceaselessly:

"You ministers and Bigan,
I do not think these humble gifts,
Can make them happy and content,
Maybe this is not the best conciliatory way.

"Since you only have such limited ability,
Why do you make them angry?
You respectable ministers,
Why did you talk big.

"Gifts of nine coaches,
Two hundred steeds and camels.
They do not have no idea,
Such humble gifts can not blind them.

"Livestock and wealth you plundered,
Should be returned back in full;
If we love our lives,
We need to return them generously.

"The livestock plundered from Kirgiz,
Should be returned in full according to the tribes marks;
Our land is fertile,
We can offer as much as Kirgiz want.

"They do not need to sell their sheep,
We will offer them abundant silk and brocade;
Fill all our coaches,
With gold and silver.

"Other things can be put aside,

Respectable Senchybek Khan,
You must tell us your opinion.
Six cities of Andijan,
Has no powerful administer now,
You will be the Khan of these cities.

"There is a saying:
'Delicious food can melt the stone'."
Heard the servant's words,
All the rich people at presence began to talk,
And considered that was the best suggestion,
Then they went back home to prepare.

Before they set out,
The ministers wore serious bearing,
And gave orders to their servants:
"We will welcome Manas ceremoniously,
Assemble the soldiers and horses right now.
No one can pretend to be sick,
And refuse to come out."

Laid down their sharp weapons,
Wrapped their battle banner tightly.
The spears were stuck in the earth,
Waist belts were hung on their necks,
And led their own horses.

Mullahs wore head brocade and white cloth,
They all turned out with slow steps,
"If we are killed by the hero,
White cloth can be our winding sheets."

People put white cloth on their shoulders,
No male stayed in the home,
They all turned out to welcome the hero.
People supported the old and the kids with their hands,
And walked out of the gate of the town.

They stood on both sides of the road respectfully,
To welcome Kirgiz into their town.

Seeing tide-dense Haohan people,
Kirgiz opened their eyes wide with surprise:
"Haohan people turn out here,
Do they come to fight with us,
To the last one they have."

After the disturbance,
Kirgiz troop took their hearts of grace to fight.
They made up their minds secretly,
Once Haohan people acted,
They would kill all of them.

Spears were dense as awn,
Blue banner was held high over the head.
The ribbon on the sabre handle was waving in the air,
Spears were shaking with their bodies.
Once Khan gave the order,
They could act as the hungry tiger jumped at sheep.

The heroes were all ready to fight,
They clenched their fists with great dignity.
As long as we payed a little attention,
We could find the secret in it.

The heroes were not lonely,
And wanted to create a battle.
They saw kids in the queue,
Too nervous to take a breath.
They went closer and closer to Haohan,
In order to avoid Haohan's sudden attack,
Warriors held their sabre handles tightly.

Timid people gazed right and left,
Opened their eyes wide because of nervousness.

Their minds were in whirl,
They were ready to twist off enemy's neck.

At this crucial moment,
Bakay gave out his order:
"Hot-blooded young men,
Teenagers of high and mighty,
Do not show temper so easily;
I speak to you as an elder,
Please listen to me carefully.

"Yojib① people standing opposite us,
Have been regretful and scared,
For the crime they have committed to Kirgiz;
They wear white all over them and feel nervous,
And come to atone for their own guilt,
Death has lived deep in their hearts.

"The single-ride warrior in the front,
May be their leader Senchybek;
They have taken their weapons up,
There is no sign of fighting;
Look, all spears are stuck in the earth,
They come with the old and the kids.

"Do not laugh loudly,
No matter who comes to you,
You should despise him with dignity.
You can not behave too ferociously,
To avoid the kids being scared to cry.

"You should lick your lips as tiger and wolf,
And stared your eyes round;
But you can not make the kids,
Scared to cry.

① Yojib: the name of ancient tribe in central Asia.

Before our hero comes,
You only need show our majestic bearing.

"We should listen carefully,
To their welcome speech and the gifts they offer.
They all hang the halters on their necks,
We can not distinguish for the moment,
Who is the leader and who are the common people."

Hero Bakay was experienced and steady,
He spoke out his mind.

The lion rested easy in his yurt,
And did not want to go out of his yurt.

Stopped at the place colts ran over,
Haohan people and horses watched,
They knelt down and did not dare make any step ahead.
Looked at the expression of Senchybek:
He moved slowly and kowtowed every step,
Like a horse was tied by a tab,
Kowtowed ceaselessly.

No one went in his face,
No one watched him,
And observed his whereabouts.

He dared not to stride forward,
Bowed and scraped like a bride.
He lowered his hands and breast,
Shaking as a woman.

His waist was more and more painful,
His knees had festered.
His nerves and muscles shrank,
And joints were creaking.

Eyes opened as big as the wooden bowls,
Scaring looking was on his face.
He crazily supported his body narrowly,
Through countless hardships,
He finally got close to Manas' yurt.

His hands touched the ground,
Held the earth and spread on his face.
With fawning smile on his face,
He waited for the order silently.

Do not grab grass from mouth of sheep①,
Two hours later,
Sharp-tongued Aji Bayi began to speak:
"You kowtow for each step,
Nod and bow ceaselessly,
Please tell us who you are!"

Senchybek greeted Aji Bayi submissively,
Squeezed some words out of his mouth:
"I, Senchybek, plunder your people,
Act rudely and rashly without consideration,
I have committed such big crime,
So I kowtow to apologize sincerely.

"With absolute sincerity of my heart,
I pray for Manas Khan good health and long life.
If he takes out his sabre to kill me,
I will stretch my neck out with all my heart.

"I believe slanderous talk of Banus,
And did not resist his dispatch.
Even he tears me to pieces,
I will have no complaints but accept.

① Grab grass from mouth of sheep: It means that do not interrupt other's talk. It is Kirgiz custom that do not chip in or interrupt when others are talking, which is meant to show the politeness and kindness.

"I will dedicate to hero Manas,
My head and my cities.
I heard that bright and brave Manas,
Is a broad minded hero.

"What all I can do,
Is just these things.
I do not pretend to say sweet words,
To whitewash and respond with prepared words.

"I have been at a loss what to do,
The end of my world may have been in front of me.
Manas Khan is so wise and resolute,
I wish he can make a magnanimous decision.

"Please let him check the brands carefully,
To pick out livestock of Kirgiz;
If the livestock is short in number,
I will make up for it.

"The place we live is called the barn,
We can supply all the grain you need;
Do not sell your sheep only for brocade and silk,
I will dedicate them to you.

"You do not need do gold washing from sand,
I will offer you abundant gold and silver;
Gold can be carried with coaches,
And I will offer fat single-hump camels too.

"We produce fine steeds here,
He can choose to the top of his bent.
In six cities and Andijan city,
Gold made throne seat is ready for him.

"Here is the hometown of fruits,
I am willing to present him the flourishing garden.

I beg he can form an alliance with me,
And forgive the crime I have committed to Kirgiz.

"I swear to him sincerely,
I will pay tribute to him on time every year.
If he does not trust me,
He can make others replace me at any time.

"If King Manas give me the freedom,
I swear to follow him all my life.
If he accept my request,
Please come into my city with me.
As long as I have only one breath,
I will be faithful to Manas Khan forever."

Senchybek begged for forgiveness from his heart,
With snot and tear.

Aji Bayi listened to his words,
And reported in detail what he had said,
To Bakay and Chuwak.

Bakay sighed with relief,
And stroke his beard at the same time:
"Aji Bayi, listen to me,
Let him go back and set your heart at rest.
We will not be delayed at this place,
We will arrive there soon after him.
If he can keep his promise,
We will leave his place soon without staying long.

"Kerlgelchal administers your warriors strictly,
Do not let them plunder there at their will.
Good or bad, it will be distinguished well,
The whole world will know the truth at last."

Heard Bakay's order,

Aji Bayi turned to Senchybek,
And gave out his order:
"Senchybek,
You do not need sit stay here,
Like a tree stump.
Please go quickly and tell your people,
Ask them to go back home immediately.

"Please convey our words to them,
We will go into the city soon.
You can go back to your city first,
And get ready to welcome us.

"It will please every of us,
If your gifts are good enough.
You will be in trouble,
If we do not like your gifts.
We will keep our words,
We will not do harm to your people.
All your words are true or not,
We need to verify."

Hearing Aji Bayi's words,
Sweat-profuse Senchybek showed his smile.
He knelt at Aji Bayi's feet,
Unfolded his hands and prayed ceaselessly.

Happiness appeared in the face of Senchybek,
All his people saw his expression.
He declared to his people happily,
That the hero had bestowed peace to them.

The troop of Senchybek,
Followed his people to go back into the city.
Everyone was happy,
Like they achieved great victory.

"This is the whole course of it!"
The story was spread everywhere.

People of all ages and both sexes,
Cheered with joyed:
"Wish Manas good health and long life,
It is good that you went to plead guilty."

People were all immersed in the sea of joy,
They danced with joy and excitement.
Although they had not seen the black mane wolf,
They all prayed for him.

It seemed they could not believe,
That Manas had forgiven their guilt.
No matter the old, the young, men or women,
Happy tears ran down their cheeks.
They cleaned their yards carefully,
And prepared everything well,
Only to wait for the coming of the hero.

Lion-like hero Manas,
Accompanied by giant Bakay and Chuwak,
Led forty warriors headed by Kerlgelchal,
Went forward along the slope.

People gave out such cry:
"Kirgiz get the good fortune,
The luck descends on them;
Arashi of sixty tribes,
Get this prize of Allah.

"Onuzdo's ten sons,
Were oppressed and exploited by Karamark arbitrarily;
But karamark today,
Are defeated by them.
What magical world this is,

It is hard to tell its inconstancy.

"Manas is really a great lion,
He is perfect without any flaw.

"Look at his battle gown and his steed,
Look at his weapons and his dress;
Look at his warriors and his people,
Look at his advisers and his heroes.

"Wise old man Bakay,
Is clever enough and hard to find in the world.
Look at that smart Aji Bayi,
Wisdom is always ready in his mouth.
If he has no proper words,
He does not speak even one letter.

"Look at forty warriors,
They are as orderly as the willows at the river bank;
Kerlgelchal who leads them,
Wins the respect from all others,
Respecting teachers and the elders is their virtue.

"They play many kinds of games when they station,
The singing is loud and the custom is age-old,
Such a powerful troop,
Must hold the world in awe."

The heroes stayed in the city for three days,
They drank to their content with strong tea,
Mares were killed every day;
Tail fat from the black sheep,
Were used to serve the old.

All gifts Senchybek promised,
Were all kept well;
Brands were checked carefully,

And all Kirgiz livestock were returned back.

Aligning contract was sealed,
Framed the tribute they should hand in each year.
"Make peace with each other forever."
Senchybek expressed his faithfulness.

In order to show his sincerity,
He broke off a new willow branch.
Senchybek kept his promise,
And did not change any of it.

Aji Bayi opened his mouth again,
His words were very decent:
"Senchybek, the king of Haohan,
Your generosity is obvious to all:
White gold, pure silver and jewelry are all here,
In order to show your good faith,
You even lead your camels and horses here.

"Grain is piled like mountain,
Silk and brocade are all around.
We observe carefully these three days,
We have known your actual strength.

"Livestock belonged to Kirgiz,
Will be taken back by their own masters,
Those camels and horses,
Have no meaning to us,
So we will return them back to you.

"Please send abundant food,
And cloth to us every year on time,
And gold and silver too.
As for Haohan city,
You can still administer it.

"We wish your position firm,
Wish your people live peacefully,
We will always appreciate your good deed.
Banus and Keliff,
Are ambitious and avaricious,
We need go on the expedition right away."

Let us put this aside,
Talk about the breath-taking battle,
Between Manas and Banus.

Great Battle between Manas and Banus in Tashkent

Hostlers led the horses,
Rushed around breathlessly,
All people in Haohan city,
Dare not neglect at all.

All people were busy here and there,
And with the smile of satisfaction on their faces.
They saddled and led the horses,
Warriors steeped on the stirrups and mounted the horses,
The troop of Manas went out of the gate of the city.

They went ahead along the foot of a mountain,
Went on toward Tashkent,
They did not go to any village,
To disturb people on their way.

Vast area out of Haohan,
And the place near Samurhan,
Was called Bozbel,
Which was vast and broad.

Valleys and plains there,
Were all arboreous and forested;
No matter you have seen or have heard,
All kinds of bizarre animals in the world,
Could all be found there.

Kelchind basin,
Was on the east of Bozbel.

Apple trees were in various species,
Apples were as big as sheep heads.

There were tigers and lions in the forest,
Ferocious beasts haunted there too.
Dense forest was,
Always hard to go through.

The fountain flew with a merry gurgle,
The leaves rustled in the gentle wind;
Birds sang in the sky,
As one fell and another rose;
All sorts of flowers were in full blossom,
Grass was green and fragrant.

Wolverines and lynxes,
Ran in the wilderness;
All the timid animals,
Ran into the jungles.

Antelopes gazed left and right,
Wild boars howled in brushwood;
Ostriches swayed all the time,
Zebras ran in the forest.

Antelopes walked in the marsh,
Doe wandered about at leisure on the lake islands;
Wild ducks and swans roamed,
And looked for the food in the lake.

Larks sang beautifully,
Amorous people wavered;
People could be entangled,
In the waist-high grass.

Willow branches waved in the breeze,
Like girls' beautiful hair;

Cuckoos sang together,
And passed their feelings to each other.

Mist wreathed in the sky,
Magical Kelchind was so mysterious,
Water in the lake shone in the sun,
Horses ran along the lake.

Heroes stayed here for two days,
Soldiers and horses rested well.
Ayikoler Manas led his troop,
Climbed on the mountain top along the zigzag paths.

The mountain was steep with narrow passes,
It was suitable for sentries to station and guard.
Steep cliffs were on both sides,
The only pass was between them.

The careless sentries did not pay attention,
To the coming troops;
Erchywuler searched the road in the front,
Met the sentry who was on patrol duty by chance.

Seeing the figure of Erchywuler,
The sentry wanted to turn round and flee,
But his horse was browsing far from him.
Erchywuler ran fast to the side of the sentry,
The sentry shouted loudly with great fear:
"Do not get any closer to me, say secret password to me right now!"

Erchywuler felt so angry,
He sent the order to the sentry smartly:
"Little sentry, you are only a servant.
What can you do if I go close you,
What can you do if I do not go close you?"

Erchywuler faced the sentry,

Made the thunder-like angry shouting.
He was like a dead caller,
Behaved so angrily and aggressively.

The sentry was not with himself there,
He had six or seven companions around him,
These fellows gave him the encouragement,
So he dared to make the inquiry.

Seeing Erchywuler's invincible might,
All of them were scared so much,
They got together without any complaints,
And guarded by Erchywuler.

Erchywuler led these captives,
To the side of the heroes.
The sentries were all scared to death,
One smart guy saluted them and payed the respects,
The others just echoed what this guy said,
With their heads lowered and in great panic.

They stood in a row,
And their voices cracked with fear,
And bones were too shaking to support their bodies.

Eloquent Aji Bayi,
Began to question the sentries:
"You sentries on duty,
Please return your place immediately,
Report our news,
To your Khan Keliff.

"Please keep the words I told you,
Deep in your mind.
Keliff and Banus,
Plundered Kirgiz without any reason.

"Great lion Manas has arrived,
At the Bozbel bay,
He will not descend the disaster,
To innocent people for nothing at all.

"We will stay and wait here for ten days,
If there are no response,
We will not disturb your horses,
But we will charge into Tashkent city,
And trample the whole city under our feet.

"Damned Banus,
Acted in collusion with Karamark in Aranick,
And now they flee and hide in Tashkent,
To do all sorts evil here.

"Plundered the horses from Kirgiz,
This is the crime he committed!
If Keliff is a hero,
Ask him to lead his troops and come out of the city.

"In Haohan city,
Senchybek has bowed his head without a fight;
If Keliff dares to come for battle,
We must let his head and body be apart.

"If he pretends to present lavish gifts to us,
We will not accept his submission;
Especially damned Banus,
Black mane wolf Manas never forgives him!

"You do not stay here unfeelingly,
Go back and report to them right now,
You must tell in detail,
What we said to Banus and Keliff."

After hearing Aji Bayi's words,

The sentries all covered their heads and crept away,
They rejoiced they could save their life.

It was the time of late autumn,
Cold winter was approaching.
The heroes tasted fresh deer meat,
Their interest of hunting aroused a lot,
They chased and ran in the forest and valley.

There were new gains every day,
They found great pleasure in it.
They picked out the fat wild goat,
To play the game catching goat happily.

The promissory ten days,
Passed in a twinkle of an eye.
The sentries escaped by the skin of their teeth,
Had gone back to report the news to their Khan.

Banus and Keliff,
Sat together with other ministers,
To discuss and exchange their opinions,
And were trying to figure out the brilliant scheme.

Most of them were in a rather nervous state,
They put up the opinion of conciliation,
"Lion Manas comes here,
Only for taking revenge,
He must trample on us.

"If we encourage ourselves to fight with him,
All of us will be killed like in Aranick.
Who is guilty and who is innocent,
It is hard to distinguish in the battlefield.
Our disaster has come,
The end of our happy life has descended."

But Keliff did not adopt their brains,
He made the decision to fight.
Bloodthirsty Keliff,
Would never get tired in fight battles.

He lived in the city for a long time,
So he had felt weary and bored.
Beat the drums and sounded the horns,
He called up his followings extremely anxiously.

Streaming-column troop rushed out of the city,
Thousands of camels like the river flooded,
Loaded all kinds of weapons.
Carried iron shields which spears could not go through,
Carried many kinds of supplies and abundant food.
As long as the family cooked for themselves,
There must be one person from the family to go and be a soldier.

Flood-like soldiers swarmed ahead,
Dust behind them covered half of the sky.
He tried in vain to destroy all Kirgiz tribes,
And killed all the heroes on the horses.

But he never worried,
About his own fate.
He led his troop rush out of the city,
Colourful battle banners waved in the wind.

"Keliff, Banus has come and they have more soldiers,
But they do not enjoy popular support.
Innocent soldiers are forced to come for battle,
How could they want to die for Keliff."

Ayikoler Manas led his troops,
Held their big banner high,
And had arrived at the broad battlefield.
The curtain of a great battle had parted.

The camps had been pitched,
And the banner had been stuck in the earth tightly,
Right at this moment,
Keliff sent out one of his valiant general.

This was a guy named Tirmuer,
He was a domineering sort of fellow,
In the area of Tashkent and Badak mountain,
No one failed to know him.

From his ferocious expression,
You could know is not common.
He never put someone in his mind,
Fought with Manas by himself,
Was his hope in a long term,
Once he thought that he would be excited.

Keliff and Banus knew that,
This thought of Tirmuer,
Was in his mind like flaming fire.

Silver-hooves steed under him,
Was in a bad temper all the time.
Tirmuer unleashed all his ferocity,
Stared his angry eyes round,
Sinister in appearance like monsters,
And teeth ground with great rage.

The shield was on the shoulder,
And the iron stick was set in front of the saddle.
He whipped his steed,
And rushed into the battlefield proudly,
He wanted in vain to destroy everything,
To descend disaster to Kirgiz.

He kicked the horse with stirrups hard,
And was as ferocious as a monster;

All the ferocity showed on his face,
Which made anyone saw him scared,
Fierce wind rose up high behind the steed.

Zhatay on the yellow steed,
Was one of forty warriors,
Since he was chosen to be one warrior of the forty,
He always complained he had no chance to win honour.

"Let these boys go and fight today!"
Bakay Khan gave out such order.
Zhatay finally achieved what he wished,
He rushed out for fight first.
The yellow steed under him,
Was a very famous fine steed,
With its ears standing straightly.
The long bent wolf-tongue spear,
Waved in his hand,
Like a fierce tiger rushed out from the side,
And charged to the enemy directly.

The fine steed dashed ahead,
With its ears up and tail waving;
Damned Tirmuer was stabbed,
As soon as he came out.
Zhatay was a hero with skillful martial arts,
He ended Tirmuer's life with only one prick.

Right at this moment,
Tajik hero Totoy made a loud shout.
Zhatay was right on fire,
So he went on dashing ahead regardless of his danger.
Facing loudly shouting Totoy,
He went in the face and began the fierce fight.

Battle banner was chopped down on the ground,
Proud and arrogant Totoy,

Was ended his own life by hero Zhatay,
On the first round of their fight.

Tirmuer and Totoy lost their lives one after another,
Tatay went to the battle after them;
It was a pity that poor guy,
Went to the hell fast.

A warrior named Ketirk,
Was born in Karik tribe,
He was a monster killing without blinking an eye,
Was a ferocious bloodthirsty demon.

He was armed from head to feet,
Shouted the name of "Banus Khan!".
He dashed ahead irresistibly,
Chased after the yellow steed of Zhatay,
Approached and stabbed on the horse bottom,
And turned the hero over on the ground.

Zhatay fell off the horse,
Atay from Alijan tribe,
Whipped his steed and rushed into the battlefield,
And saved Zhatay who was in danger,
And attacked Ketirk in the face.

The powerful foe dodged the spear of Atay,
And pricked Atay down his horse;
Atay fell and rolled on the ground,
Yumit from Wusan then rushed ahead to fight.

There was no use of his coming,
Ketirk was high in spirits of fighting,
Before one-round fight ended,
Before the first prick finished,
Yumit from Wusan fell off from the saddle too.

Ketirk had not adjusted himself on the horse,
Warrior Jaysan had dashed ahead to him;
Ketirk looked down his nose to Jaysan,
And pricked him down the horse easily.

Carakodge from Aragan tribe,
Rode on a purple horse,
Dashed ahead in a hurry,
With dust rising into sky.
He just began the fight with his powerful foe,
He was pricked off his horse by Ketirk.

Five heroes from Kirgiz,
Were all Ketirk's defeated opponents.
They were all wounded badly,
It was so sad to see their blood running.

Five fellows were stabbed one after another,
Aji Bayi rushed into the battlefield with great anger,
Denkulan steed under him,
Ran so fast that its hooves made much noise.

Proud Ketirk,
Took a glance at Aji Bayi,
He wanted to prick him off the horse,
Like the previous five heroes.

He whipped his horse forward,
As proud as a peacock.
Facing the proud enemy,
Aji Bayi was not soft-hearted at all.

The spear pricked out to his face,
Was warded off by his battle axe.
The spear fell aside,
He raised his axe high and chopped to his rival.

Who could survive under his axe,
How could Ketirk stand up again?
With head being broken and brain running out,
Ketirk went to hell immediately.

Aji Bayi whipped his date red steed,
More than ten warriors died under his axe.
Brave Aji Bayi,
Rushed into enemy camp to fight.
He fought continuously and did not get off the steed,
And went back to his camp till the next evening.

Tired warriors ceased all activities,
And began to go to sleep.
Valiant soldiers sent by all tribes,
Patrolled and watched their enemies.

Dark cloud was full in the sky,
It was dark all round,
The day was as dark as the night.
Snowflakes whirled in the sky like a myriad of feathers,
The snow was so heavy,
That reached one's armpit.

Right at this moment,
Keliff and Banus,
Sent out their messengers.
Totally four messengers came,
They brought the letter of their Khan.

Flame-like Sirak,
Was really the lucky star of Kirgiz.
Heads-up hero Bakay,
Said some words pleasant to the ear:
"The messengers should be welcomed warmly,
Please help them get off the saddles,
And change clean clothes for them,

Let them eat and drink full,
Arrange them to my yurt,
To show our warmth to messengers."

No messenger came before this.
Manas also did not send messenger,
They had no rules for sending messengers to each other.

Hearing Bakay's words,
Hero Sirak came slowly,
Put on new clothes for messengers,
Took out delicious food to treat them.
He led the messengers into the camp,
Showed the dignity and manner of Manas Khan.

Spread out the splendid woolen felt,
Took over the letter from messengers,
Focused on reading the letter,
And learned the information of the letter eagerly:

"We plundered your people first,
Which make you come to revenge.
The heavy snow blocked everything,
We are experiencing great loss.

"We have young people and children,
Have disabled people,
And also strong and healthy people;
We have babies crying for food,
And the old as weak as water.
All these innocent women and fellows,
Will lose their lives in the battle.

"If you agree,
We hope we can fight next summer.
If we fight in this fiercely cold winder,
Our people will suffer dual disasters,

Their ghosts will make us restless!

"You totally have four hundred and eighty people,
We will supply the provisions during this time,
If both sides agree with it,
We will not fight each other within six months."

After reading the letter,
And understanding the information in it,
Frank and forthright Manas Khan,
Ordered his servant to write back,
And stamped it by his imperial seal:
"There are babies crying for food,
And the old as weak as water,
You say they will die in the battle innocently,
This is absolutely true.
We can not get others in trouble,
For only Banus and you.

"If you are really sincere,
And keep your promise,
Next morning,
We will withdraw to the forest.
Climb over Bozbel ridge,
Pitch camps and rest there.

"Do not care about our affairs,
Just live your lives at your pleasure.
We never fail to stand by our words,
You do not need to supply provision for us.

"Please open your markets in the city freely,
We will pay gold and silver for buying foodstuff;
Please do not stand in the way,
Of those who go to markets.

"You are free to do the trade,

I never think of taking your advantage;
We will go to battlefield to fight,
When the snow melts.

"This is my reply,
If you have no different opinion,
Both of us will carry out as I said."

After sending those messengers away,
The warriors caught their breath.
The free passage of coming and going,
Was totally open without any obstacle.

The heroes climbed over Bozbel ridge,
Arrived at the place people were yearning to,
They pitched their camps out of Haohan city.

Ayikoler Manas thought back and forth to himself,
Then made the strict rules for the warriors:
"You can look ahead,
But you can not go into the city freely;
If you go and saunter in the city at random,
You will be in low spirits,
And we go back on our word.

"I have made the promise to them,
We will station in the forest,
The words I have just told them,
It can not be changed randomly."

According to the will of the lion Manas,
They lived in the forest in winter.
The cold winter was going to be through,
The warm spring was approaching.

The ice and snow covered the earth,
Had not melted totally.

It was just the January weather,
The time of six-month appointment had not come yet.

Early grass grew on the edge of the forest,
It echoed the footsteps of the spring,
The snow was going to melt.
Manas and Chuwak got together,
Discussed carefully,
Bakay gave out the order of action:

"The weather gets warmer and spring is coming,
It is the right time for planting.
Warriors have been so bored,
For three months having nothing to do,
We plan to open up the land in the forest,
Let our warriors do some exercises.
I believe the product of our labour,
Will be praised by our people."

Chopped thick willows off,
Made the plough from them,
Nailed the chocks on both sides,
And fastened the handle.

Put the ploughs on the horses,
Sowed seeds in the lands,
And leveled the lands with willow twigs.

When the wheat just showed their head,
They dug straight water channel,
And gave the wheat first water,
The field sowed seeds in,
Were fertilized and irrigated by their people.

The working charged was paid in gold,
Fine work was necessary,
The family in charge of guarding the field,

Was happy with seeing the wheat field.

The due time was coming,
Farming work had to be put aside,
They whipped the horses and climbed over Bozbel ridge,
Swarmed to Tashkent city like the flood.

"The crop Kirgiz sowed,
Made a good harvest."
The news of harvest,
Came after they won the battle.

"The battle is going to come tomorrow."
Banus and Keliff,
Did not forget the appointment with Kirgiz either.
Common people lived a peaceful life,
Witnessed all what was happening,
They were complaining and discussing widely.
They did not dare to express their resentment,
And buried their rage deep in their hearts.

Ministers came one after another,
Sat on the floor in a circle,
Discussed in low voice,
About the news of hero Manas:
"Manas is the greatest hero in the world,
He is broad-minded and fair;
He is like a mine of treasure,
It is never redundant no matter how we praise him.

"Protect and love the people,
Which hero dare compare with him?
He stations in Bozbel,
But he even did not ask for a lamb.

"Haohan has bowed his head to Manas,
But he does not ask for the livestock for winter,

There are countless livestock on the prairie,
They do not ask for them randomly.

"They make the place they stay in a market,
To do business with common people fairly;
Merchants bought in low prices and sold much higher,
They make a big fortune in a short time.

"Sow seeds in spring,
They do not apportion taxes to anyone,
For the person who guards the crop field,
They pay him with pure gold.

"All the things happened here,
Prove how fair he is."
All ministers praised the hero ceaselessly,
No one say any word to disparage him.

All ministers stopped praising Manas,
But began to admire Kirgiz;
Their topic turned to Banus and Keliff,
To express their dissatisfaction and hatred to them:

"Nasala's son Keliff,
Occupied Tashkent city and exploited people in the city,
They did not give us any advantages,
But the great number of different taxes.

"One Keliff has made us miserable,
Now Banus comes,
These two guys compete in exploiting people,
Every day they stretch out their hands to ask more,
No one can fulfill their endless greed.

"We'd better make preparation secretly,
The battle will start in two or three days,
We can take the right opportunity,

To seek refuge with Manas as soon as we can.

"If our intention of actions,
Is noticed by Banus and Keliff,
We will be killed undoubtedly."
Ministers discussed in secret,
And made their plan for action.

Most common people,
Contacted and organized secretly,
To make big trouble for Keliff and Banus.
Once they did not enjoy the popular confidence,
Troubles would come one on the heels of the other.

Manas led his cavalry,
Had arrived at the battlefield.
Banus and Keliff,
Led their troops came in a hurry,
And put up their tents along the side of the battlefield.

It was so different from before,
No matter the old or the children went to be soldiers,
They did not apportion the number to each family;
Once a person could hold the bowl to eat,
Once a man could stand to pee,
No one could be left in any family.

Anyone who found the excuses,
Who wanted to flee from there,
Was caught and put into prison;
Any timid person,
Was lashed severely and mercilessly.

Put iron chains on their hands and feet,
Drove iron nails in their palms,
Kicked hard and lashed severely.
Common people was suffering unspeakably,

The fire of rebellion was waiting for a spark only.

This time,
Banus went out first for battle:
"Either I die in the hands of Kirgiz,
Or I let kirgiz perish inside out."

Banus nerved himself and went out for battle:
"Our fighting spirit is as high as the sky,
Kirgiz must be destroyed totally."
Empty-headed soldiers were encouraged and happy.

Seeing proud Banus,
Black mane wolf Manas waved his lash and went for fight;
In Aranick battlefield,
He had already showed power,
Now he was full in confidence,
And whipped his steed to the battlefield.

When Banus saw Manas,
He kept growling with great rage,
And gasped for air,
Like the flame blowing up by bellows.

Timid soldiers saw Banus,
They were scared out of their wits,
And all shook in their shoes,
And could not help peeing in their pants.
Under the feet of Banus,
The earth shook ceaselessly.

Manas rode his Arkura steed,
Sear spear was shining cold in his hand,
The head of his blue battle boots pointed at the sky,
Doughty hero was outstanding.

The great lion charged by himself,

His figure was as high as a mountain,
He had the vigour of ninety heroes.
His face glowed with health,
His temperament was hard to find in the world.

White battlegown was on him,
Twenty seven buttons stood orderly,
And were tied tightly in loops.
The power of the black mane wolf,
Failed to know by nobody at presence.

His enthusiasm was as hot as the sun in summer,
His steeliness was as cold as the bise in winter;
His manner of charging ahead,
Was as awe-inspiring as tigers rushing down the mountain.
He had the power of big dragon,
His shouting was earth-shaking.

Manas and Banus met face to face.
"I will prick my spear into his body."
Banus had such intention.
Spear was waving in his hand,
The sound of it went into the ears,
And his spear stabbed toward Manas.

The spear Banus pricked out,
Was warded off by the great lion.
Hero's steel-made Sear spear,
Pricked to the front of the chest of Banus.
Banus held his spear in both hands,
And warded off the spear hero Manas pricked out.

Banus was highly skilled in military drill,
Manas could sweep all before him,
Two heroes fought with their full strengths,
And refused to yield to each other.

Battle axe chopped on helmet and,
Spear met breast protector made much noise.
Angry shouting roared to the sky,
And birds in the sky were shaken off on the ground.

Sparks been splashed from helmet,
Became stars dancing in the sky.
The death was looking for its target,
Either hero's life must be taken away.

Banus pricked his spear out with his full strength,
But the spear broke into half and fell on the ground;
Leopard Manas whipped his Arckura steed,
Rushed right at the side of Banus;
Before Banus turned himself round,
Manas pricked toward his left shoulder again.

Shaking Banus,
Supported his body by his hand;
Before the hero pulled out the spear from his shoulder,
Keliff could not wait and bear any more,
He rushed out and pricked toward black mane wolf.

Being pricked the right shoulder by Keliff,
Manas made his bottom left the saddle without any precaution.
Before the fierce enemy pricked the hero down,
Hero Chuwak like the whirlwind,
Pricked his spear severely,
To the hip of Nasala's son Keliff.
Wind-like Koktiky steed,
Had run ahead as far as an arrow could shoot in a second.

Angry Ayikoler Manas,
Turned round and watched,
He saw Banus standing up from the ground,
With his body shaking heavily.

Hero turned the head Arckura round,
Rushed to the side of Banus,
Raised his cold shining spear,
Pricked through throat of Banus.

Sharp Sear spear,
Pierced through the neck of Banus;
He was in great pain,
With his body shivering all over and then died.
His four limbs stretched out,
And fell flat on his back.

Black mane wolf had killed Banus,
He was looking around proudly,
To settle accounts with Keliff,
But he did not find his rival's figure.
Whipped his magical mount Arckura,
And ran fast to the direction dust rose high.

Keliff whipped his horse to flee,
And turned his head round to look in panic.
Chuwak waved the spear and whipped his horse,
Chased after him tightly.

Black mane wolf had killed Banus,
He was encouraged greatly with his blood afire,
How could he let ferocious Keliff off.

Chuwak's mount was a famous steed,
It ran so fast that it looked like flying.
There was a wheat thrashing floor near the battlefield,
In the center of the big floor,
Was a deep and big hole for erecting the wooden pole,
The horse and Chuwak fell off with one of horse hoof falling in the hole.

Taking this chance, fleeing Keliff,
Turned his horse round and rushed to Chuwak.

He waved his sabre at lightening speed,
And tried to chop Chuwak's head off.

But the sound of Arkrura's clops,
Came into his ears.
Keliff recognized it was Arkrura,
And he was sure that lion Manas had come.

He lost his mind and fell into great panic,
He had no courage to fight with Manas again.
In order to save his life,
He fled away regardless his face.

Keliff ran back his camp,
The wound pricked by Chuwak,
Was bleeding seriously.
He conducted desperate struggles with heavy breath,
But still gave out the order viciously:
"All soldiers charge and wipe Kirgiz out!"

The main troop in Tashkent had been disintegrated,
No one was willing to listen to the order of the tyrant.
No one shot his firelock,
No one beat the battle drum,
And no one took his sabre out of the sheath,
Enemy soldiers were like ducks in a thunderstorm,
They all went and surrendered to Kirgiz.

"If I am caught by Kirgiz,
The end of my life will come."
Keliff knew his day had gone,
So he sat on the saddle fast,
And fled toward the direction of Kasan.

Chuwak whipped his steed and went on chasing him,
Uncle Bakay came from his side,
And held his halter tightly:

"Let him go! Hero Chuwak!"
He led Chuwak's horse forcefully,
And dragged him back to the camp.

Keliff was defeated and fled toward Kasan,
How about other people?
Senchybek sent out spies,
So he had all news of the battle at his fingertips.

"How will the result be about?"
He watched ceaselessly and thought carefully.
When he got the result of the battle,
He chose a certain day,
Came to the face of Manas and said:
"Hero Manas, how do you do?"
Manas met Senchybek,
And he discussed the future affairs with Bakay.

In Tashkent and Andijan,
The fertile fields connected one from another.
"You are going to be in charge of this land!"
He recommended Senchybek as Khan of that area.

Mountain-like Senchybek,
Built his palace in Haohan,
And administered the whole area of Tashkent.

"I experience a spell of good fortune,
My dreams are all fulfilled.
When Manas comes,
I made wise decision for myself,
To form an alliance with him."
Senchybek was so proud of himself,
He was self-satisfied too much with his decision.

"I will return Samurhan!
We rode our horses to the battle,

For whole nine months,
How is our family there now?"
Lion Manas made the triumphant return.

When he went back his palace,
Abultay was still there,
And was still waiting for him hard.
Manas advised old Abultay,
To go back to Namgan to enjoy his rest years.

Abultay returned his hometown,
Life descended the halo on him.
All the things began to be better and better,
His wife who had not been pregnant for many years,
Gave birth to a boy for him suddenly.

"You are so strong, old man!"
People praised him with big surprise.
Abultay thought over and over,
Then named his son Kesaik.

From then on his family became prosperous,
Like the flowers in spring.
The offspring of Kesaik multiplied,
And finally formed a big tribe.
Since then in Kirgiz,
There was another tribe called Kesaik.

Let us put this aside,
And talk about the story,
Of the wedding of Manas and Kanikai.
